

Americans Have A Fundamental Right – Freedom From Invasion

In terms of rights, the American people have a fundamental right to live in a nation free from invasion. Our government has a sacred duty to protect its citizens. Though I voted Democratic for most of my life, I feel today's party has become something very different. Moderation itself is now met with smear campaigns that mirror the propaganda tactics of World War II.

Republicans, for their part, have consistently reiterated that their boundaries and policies are aimed not at legal, lawful immigrants but at the crises of cartel violence, mass illegal entry, and modern slavery. Yet the Democratic Party continues to ignore these realities, focusing instead on virtue signaling—whether about vaccines, women's rights, veganism, or climate change—while leaving the core issues of national security unaddressed. This neglect opens wounds in our country that cannot heal without meaningful state intervention.

What we are witnessing now is nothing short of catastrophic political warfare against the American people. It is so severe that law enforcement and military personnel, many of them young, now face real threats and even bounties on their badge numbers. Yet despite these dangers, many Americans have stayed humble, disciplined, and fact-driven, and I am proud to see their research and courage confirmed daily.

No one but an American is entitled to this land. And while I remain moderate in my politics, I support the Republic for which it stands. We do not bow to our enemies. As extremists—those willing to harm our soldiers and law enforcement—are arrested one by one, I believe we must let the military and our institutions do what they do best: protect the American people. ❤️🇺🇸

A vertical rectangular image showing a path in a forest during autumn. The trees and ground are covered in vibrant orange and red leaves. The path leads into the distance, flanked by tall trees. The overall mood is warm and serene.

A NATION STRONG.
A PEOPLE
UNITED.
SECURE OUR HOMELAND