

Thieves, Traffickers and Evil-Doers

By D. Cowdrey

Thieves, Traffickers, and Evil-Doers

They thrive in unchecked environments, and they add injury to intrusion by insulting those they steal from.

In this political climate where women are undervalued by the unevolved and the dull her ideas are treated as communal spoil, unshielded for exploitation.

She is overshadowed by the players of the underworld.
They do not merely take bites out of her they consume her whole, leaving her to decay

like fallen leaves (leaflets) on the ground.

And they do.

Time and time again,
they steal her ideas.

But it was her concept.
Her thought.
Her creation.

She toed the line,
but they wanted the world to believe they towed her

their doe,
a female thing to steer,
to brand,
to break.

So, in order to dominate and to mar, they took her for everything she was worth char for char.

May the spell be broken.

May humanity be shown light once again.

And may the thieves, traffickers, and evil-doers finally learn
to take bites
out of their own hands.