

The Dichotomous Nature of the Military Servant

We cry. We get angry. We live with PTSD, depression, anxiety, and, for some, even suicidal tendencies. Sadly.

Yet we also laugh. We have fun. We enjoy our work. And, for some reason, the thought of deploying to war can make us paradoxically, happy.

We enjoy working with others who share these ethos and are dichotomous, like us.

We are an all-volunteer force:

→ Who is human. Who believes in protecting their country, even at great personal cost.

To us, military service is the best job in the world.
