

Cowdrey's Statement to the Nation

Fellow American Spirited,

America now faces the reality of competing civilizations within our nation. In this moment, I choose Americans, Native, anthropological, and American spirited. We are humbled before God, our land, and our people, and we move together in spirit.

My oath has always been to my country and to our people. I do not pledge allegiance to foreign nations, new age pioneers, or immigrants who do not share this same responsibility to us.

Quite the opposite, I believe that we could have had a beautiful relationship, and that if integration into the American spirit had occurred, things may have been different. However, tribalism, hostilities, and harms against the American people cannot be tolerated.

This position is offered within the peaceful orders of the United States and with a commitment to peace, public safety, and the shared responsibility of being American. The strength of our nation depends on us, our allegiance to one another, and honoring our values and our people.

We move forward together in good faith, guided by duty to our country, respect for our laws, and humility before God.

May God bless the United States of America.
