

We Need Military Veterans In Office

As we face unprecedented warfare overseas and domestically, and after relentless targeting of our military and public servants by the New Left Party, what has become one of the most absurd anti military displays in United States history, it can be easily determined that the United States requires leaders who have served in our military and respect our veterans.

Anti-statism isn't just an ideology. In the modern world, it is a mental illness. It shouts inexperience, social immaturity, an inability to recognize the larger strategic picture, and a lack of the leadership qualities the United States requires to secure and safeguard our communities.

It is easy for senators and other leaders to sit in their offices and criticize the military. They can do this all day. That's the beauty of being an American with our freedoms. However, let's not forget that they wouldn't be afforded this privilege if it weren't for our great military, which is the backbone of our country.

While they can say whatever they wish about our military and public servants, it has become clear how ungrateful, and spiteful they are toward the same men and women who always have their backs and remain willing to risk everything, regardless of the cost, in wars and battles those same leaders are unwilling to fight themselves.

So remember this, "fearless leaders": without our military service members, who is going to stop the bombs? We hope you enjoy your freedom.

Please choose veterans.

~Cowdrey