Mediation Between Activists & Police

1. Establish Neutral Facilitation

- Bring in trained mediators who have no direct stake in conflicts. This could be from universities, NGOs, or professional mediation organizations.
 - Neutral facilitators help create a safe space for dialogue without judgment or bias.

2. Set Ground Rules

- No personal attacks; focus on issues, not individuals.
 - Commitment to confidentiality for sensitive disclosures.
 - Agreement to listen actively and acknowledge each other's perspectives.

3. Acknowledge Grievances

- Each side lists specific grievances without interruption.
 - Police might highlight misinformation, risks to safety, and misrepresentation.
 - Activists might highlight excessive force, profiling, and systemic bias.
 - Simply acknowledging the validity of each other's concerns reduces defensiveness.

4. Identify Shared Goals

- Common ground often exists: community safety, respect for human rights, and preventing escalation.
 - Emphasize shared interest in protecting people and ensuring public spaces are safe and equitable.

5. Communication & Transparency

- Create regular communication channels: weekly calls, joint newsletters, or community meetings.
 - Both sides commit to transparency about actions, plans, and events.

6. Co-Develop Protocols

- Agree on policing protocols for protests that prioritize de-escalation.
 - Activists can commit to nonviolent conduct and clear communication of routes, timing, and expectations.
 - Both sides can create mutual reporting mechanisms to resolve misunderstandings quickly.

7. Trust-Building Exercises

- Small-scale collaborative initiatives: joint community service, safety workshops, or town halls.
 - Informal meetings outside high-tension events allow relationship-building and humanizing each side.

8. Training & Education

- Cultural competency and bias training for police.
 - Legal rights, nonviolent protest training, and de-escalation awareness for activists.
 - Optional joint sessions where police and activists role-play each other's perspective to build empathy.

9. Continuous Evaluation

- Set up a review committee with equal representation from police, activists, and community members.
 - Assess outcomes of meetings, incidents, and interventions. Adjust strategies accordingly.

10. Crisis Prevention

- Pre-agreed protocols for emergency situations.
 - Quick-response communication channels to prevent small incidents from escalating.
