

Stand with Americans

Foreign warfare against Americans doesn't always look like battles overseas — it can unfold right here in our communities. Sometimes it comes through civilians or immigrants, even women, working in ways that undermine our society. Safeguarding our culture and our nation is complex, but our judicial system is strong and designed to protect us. Still, we are witnessing cartel-driven immigration that resembles foreign invasion, extremist violence, attacks on our churches and national symbols, and infiltration within our own institutions. These are not minor issues — this is mass-scale warfare through espionage, slavery, infiltration, and treason.

That's why immigration reform and serious investigations are not about discrimination — they're about protecting citizens. Many immigrants stand with America and share our values, and it's vital to distinguish them from those who would cause us harm. As someone who advocates for community safety, I believe in pushing political moderacy forward while respecting the hard work of our forces — the FBI, DEA, police, and border enforcement — who are on the front lines.

I love this country deeply, and I call on my friends, family, and fellow citizens — including immigrants who stand with us — to unite, to safeguard our nation, and to move forward with courage and clarity. Together, we can protect what makes America strong.
