

Intimidation by Weaponized Phone Use

A group of activists force and intimidate with their phones, not respecting boundaries. They yell profanities, do not respect personal space, and continue filming despite the reporter's obvious discomfort. Essentially, they weaponize their phones and behave as a pack of voyeurs participating in "clan, or mob activism." These are not members of the "Democratic Party" as we used to know it, but representatives of a more radical, violent and confrontational strain of politics. When the reporters began to leave, they were still followed and then stalked.
