

Alright, so I have traveled extensively, and I want to offer a serious warning now. There is volatile energy just about everywhere. It is lighter in certain areas, but you will find smugglers and smuggling, Johns, drug traffickers and trafficking, hostile foreigners ready to join the war against US citizens, cartel, mafia, and gang members. You will also encounter many lost souls within homeless populations who are wandering around, walking upright, yet unresponsive.

You will find police forces that have been infiltrated, including non-documented foreigners. You will encounter hostile foreign gas attendants, some who look on at Americans with eyes "bugged out." You will see prostitutes, many of whom linger at bus stations, and many who may be victims of trafficking. You will see peddlers, foreign cab drivers who I would not dare get into a car with, and stalkers who will literally position themselves in front of your vehicle so you cannot drive away.

It is a hostile world. Those who walk with good old-fashioned American energy, loyal to their communities, loyal to the values of love and kindness, loyal to God or spirit, will feel as though they are living in a war torn USA. We live with these virtues alongside our negative encounters, and though we try to ignore them, these issues compound. They are complicated, they are everywhere, and our chances of being approached are very high.

As I get ready to enter my forties, my perspective has changed substantially. I find myself further in support of Republicans. Through my church, I offer many forms of healing, but I feel the Republican body can do far more than I can alone. These are not just issues of compassion and heart. We cannot reiki these problems away. We need tactical, robust, action-based plans that truly heal the United States.

Freedom and peace, with safety placed first for law abiding citizens, is the right and righteous path forward. What do I mean by this? It means good citizens are given the right of way on shared paths, and criminal behavior is addressed once and for all. Most crimes are not addressed. Ninety nine percent of criminals walk free in America, despite us having the highest incarceration rates in the world. That is a wake up call.

We rank severely high in domestic and street violence, as well as crimes such as human trafficking, among the worst in the world. Americans are the primary targets. When criminals ran out of Americans, they brought in foreigners. It is a continuum of abuse that should not exist in the first place. One reason it continues is that victims are denied basic human rights, while criminals are not required to be held accountable.

This needs to change. We must repair the United States through criminal prosecution and real action. Slavery is not freedom. Fentanyl is not freedom. Smuggling is not freedom. We have to do what we have to do to challenge this war.

Despite us living our best and most beautiful and positive lives, the world as we know it crumbles around us. But we can make a real change, and that change comes through enacting federal and state laws that are truly enforced. Laws are not meant to be books sitting on shelves. Enforcement must be our path forward.

Enact just laws. Enforce them.
Let US make a change.
