

The Unfortunate Energy of Negative & Shade Influences

Influences like this feed off the negative energy of others and bring “shade.” Instead of actively working against negative influences, like healthy and emotionally safe individuals, they contribute to them, creating spirals of instability and ongoing issues. These individuals can bring with them “storms,” drugs, unsafe conditions, traffickers, and other destructive influences. Remain vigilant.

It is clear that they often act as their own “patterned group,” sometimes including homeless individuals, though they may also attract drug traffickers and other harmful influences. They leave behind shopping carts, trash, alcohol bottles, and drug paraphernalia. Many are harmless; however, groups can still take over entire blocks, leaving places with an overwhelming feeling of darkness, trash, disorder, and instability. They often move together and in waves.

These individuals are frequently unconcerned with the local community experience. They may be drinking, using drugs, creating disturbances, and leaving behind debris and unsafe conditions. They often camp under bridges, near apartment buildings, and in other populated areas. There needs to be meaningful intervention in cities affected by these issues, as the result can become a loss of freedom, enjoyment, cleanliness, and safety for healthy residents, along with the destruction of property.

In areas heavily affected by these groups, additional criminal or destructive activity may also emerge, including graffiti, illegal dumping, prostitution, trafficking, and other unlawful behavior. It can gradually “ghettoize” a community and wreak havoc if left unaddressed, creating conditions that resemble social instability and disorder. Swift responses, including calls to local police departments and reporting illegal dumping or hazardous conditions to local authorities, are important in helping communities remain safe and stable.

Taking care of these communities becomes a form of energy slavery, as good citizens work tirelessly to maintain the health, and stability of the community while destructive behaviors have the ability to derail entire neighborhoods. Simply put, this is not welcomed energy within a healthy community. It often attracts additional negative influences, including individuals who bring harm, violence, exploitation, and abusive behavior; it opens the door to further hostilities.

Like a ghetto in a war zone, any open door can become an opening for further hostility and instability. These conditions pose risks and dangers to communities and must be addressed responsibly. They can infringe upon the freedoms, liberties, safety, and overall well-being of Americans and local residents alike.

Please help us close the door to negative and shade influences that forcibly shape American ghettos and hostile zones. Say no to drug trafficking, unauthorized encampments, illegal dumping, violence, and community destruction. Support safe, clean, healthy neighborhoods that protect the safety, freedom, and well-being of local residents.
