Radical Islamist extremism remains one of the most serious foreign and domestic terrorism threats to Americans, with Islamist terrorist organizations responsible for numerous deadly attacks against Americans and U.S. interests.

It's interesting to see people enthusiastically participating in celebrations such as St. Patrick's Day while simultaneously seeming to overlook the importance of preserving and appreciating American culture and heritage. There is a missing link: gratitude for American culture and society, and where these celebrations come from in the first place, our US family, and our heritage. These celebrations wouldn't be possible if radical Islam were allowed to expand and our culture were consumed by foreigners who want to hurt us.

Unfortunately, this is another consequence of “drunken politics” that can contribute to conditions exploited through hybrid forms of warfare. No, these are not “fake” threats. Allowing terrorism to expand on U.S. territory results in Americans being killed by terrorist organizations and extremist actors through political proxy.
