

Good afternoon,

I support ending birthright citizenship for many reasons. My primary concerns relate to modern political trafficking, which may target young activists, particularly during periods of geopolitical tension, including the modern Cold War with Russia and its allies. "Honey pot" operations, espionage, birth tourism, and "birth farms" are all considerations that warrant our attention.

I am concerned for the health, safety, and security of American citizens, particularly young men and young women, who may be vulnerable to various forms of exploitation, sham marriages, trafficking, recruitment, and influence operations. These risks should be taken seriously when evaluating immigration and citizenship policies.

I especially support ending birthright citizenship in cases involving crimes of moral turpitude. I believe these policies should take into account situations in which citizenship or immigration status may be connected to serious criminal conduct, including offenses involving exploitation, trafficking, violence, or other crimes committed against American citizens.

These are significant public policy issues that deserve our careful consideration. For the reasons stated above, I support ending birthright citizenship now and into the future. I am calling our on representatives to please help us place the safety and security of American citizens above all.

Thank you for your time and attention to this very important matter.

Sincerely,

Dannielle Courchene-Cowdrey
