

Union of Saints - Belief in Plant Remedies and Respect for Law

“Yess & Noh.”

At the Union of Saints, we recognize the profound healing potential of plant remedies, acknowledging their therapeutic benefits and their growing acceptance in modern society. We support the legal use of plant-based medicines where allowed, as they can offer an organic and natural alternative to conventional treatments.

However, we also emphasize the importance of adhering to current federal laws and respecting the legal boundaries that govern these substances. In many job settings and volunteer roles, it's essential to maintain awareness of regulations, especially where plant-based remedies might be restricted. For this reason, we encourage members to practice caution and follow the "6-month rule"—waiting at least six months before applying for jobs or volunteer opportunities after using plant remedies, ensuring a clean record in the eyes of employers and institutions.

While we value the healing qualities of organic medicines, we believe that sobriety and mindfulness are key to navigating life's challenges. In the end, staying clear-headed allows us to face life's demands more effectively. We advocate for safe, responsible use of plant medicines when permissible and encourage maintaining boundaries that prioritize safety, responsibility, and legal adherence. The times are indeed changing, and more people are opening their minds to plant-based alternatives, but remaining cautious and responsible is always our first priority.
