Protection Without Harm

Autonomy, Learning, and the Misuse of “Safeguarding”

A Common but Unspoken Dynamic

There is a pattern we see across families, workplaces, churches, and communities:

Sometimes women—or men—often older, position themselves as protectors of men by diminishing women, frequently younger women.

One person is safeguarded, while another is quietly harmed.

This is often justified as:

- “Concern”
- “Experience”
- “Knowing better”
- “Protection”

But protection that requires the diminishment of another is not protection.

It is imbalance; Even malignant abuse.

When Protection Becomes Control

This dynamic tends to show up as:

- Talking down to younger women
- Infantilizing language (“dear,” “sweetheart”)
- Framing women as naïve, reckless, or disruptive
- Elevating men as fragile, precious, or in need of shielding
- Withholding learning opportunities “for their own good”

This does not create safety.

It creates dependency, resentment, and stunted growth—for everyone involved.

The Union of Saints Position

The Union of Saints affirms:

People do not learn strength by being shielded from life.
They learn strength by being given tools, space, and respect.

True protection:

- Does not humiliate
 - Does not silence
 - Does not require hierarchy
 - Does not pit women against women
 - Does not freeze men into fragility

On Language and Autonomy

A boundary statement, spoken calmly and clearly:

"I am not your dear.
I am an autonomous, personal-choice-making, self-harmonizing, and outwardly-harmonizing human being.
I appreciate safety, boundaries, and protection.
And my personal goal is to learn how to protect myself."

This is not rejection.

It is self-definition.

Learning Requires Space

Growth requires:

- The freedom to make mistakes
- The dignity of being taken seriously
- The opportunity to develop discernment
- The right to set one's own boundaries
- The ability to protect one's own energy

When people are over-managed, over-corrected, or spoken down to, they are denied these essential conditions.

Protection vs. Empowerment

Protection says:

“I will handle this for you.”

Empowerment says:

“I trust you to learn, and I will support you without undermining you.”

The Union of Saints chooses empowerment.

A Balanced Closing

Live and let live—with boundaries.

Care for one another—without hierarchy.

Offer guidance—without harm.

Protect—without control.

Strength, courage, independence, and wisdom arise not from being guarded forever, but from being trusted to grow.
