

Our universities are packed to the gills with foreign-paying Chinese students who are all the children of party members. They wouldn't be allowed out of the country otherwise, for one thing, and for another, they probably wouldn't have had the hundreds of thousands in tuition to attend at full out-of-state rates.

And they're all chemists and engineers - no basketweaving 'psychology majors' in that bunch.

Doesn't anyone find that strange?

I guess not, because they keep handing out the student visas, just like they hand out the research visas to keep these same Maoist eyeballs in the country after they graduate so Winnie the Jinping and his Politburo know exactly what American test tubes are cooking up.

Or, conversely, smuggling nasty stuff in.

Happens all the time to the point where it's always, like, 'Oh, another one?'

Like fraud to Somalis, smuggled biological pathogens are immediately linked to Chinese graduate students and research assistants in American minds thanks to the frequency of the offenders.

Nobody stops them at the gate, though.

Just like illegal pot farming. In New England, it's long been known that the Chinese mafia runs the whole shebang. CBS did a story on it a couple of years ago...

Appropriations Committee, secured significant funding and legislative language to support efforts to combat the proliferation of Chinese-linked illicit drug operations in Maine in the Fiscal Year (FY) 2026 National Security, Department of State, and Related Programs (NSRP) Appropriations Act. The bill, which passed the Senate last week and was approved by the House of Representatives this afternoon, has been signed into law.

“PRC-linked criminal syndicates continue to expand their illegal marijuana grow operations in Maine while contributing to the flow of fentanyl and its precursor chemicals that threaten communities in our state and across the country,” said Senator Susan Collins, Chair of the Appropriations Committee. “This legislation strengthens our ongoing efforts to expose and disrupt these networks and provide law enforcement with the information and tools they need to protect public safety.”

The Chinese mafia is building a black-market marijuana empire across rural America—buying family homes, churches, even schools.

Maine is ground zero.

Award-winning investigative journalist Steve Robinson traveled thousands of miles across rural Maine to document and expose how Chinese drug cartels are transforming the once bucolic woods of rural Maine into festering, pesticide-laced, drug-producing sweatshops.

They're lacing marijuana with poisonous fumigants, laundering money, stealing electricity, destroying middle-class homes, and bankrupting honest, law-abiding cannabis businesses.

They're flooding the American market with unregulated, untested poison-laced weed that could harm someone you love.

It's a multi-billion-dollar industry.

But Maine Gov. Janet Mills and top officials in Augusta haven't lifted a finger to stop the foreign invasion of our homeland.

Particularly if they are being considered for access to sensitive American sites, like banking, consumer information, or - God help me, I don't know why to begin with - working on Border Patrol computers.

WHUT

Well, yeah.

Aren't we worried about Chinese everything in our phones, and cars, and spare electronic parts for our military and security agencies?

Well, then, VURT DA FURK happened here?

This CHINESE NATIONAL - not even a naturalized citizen or anything, mind you - was just arrested and charged with swapping out the guts of government computers.

Where did he work?

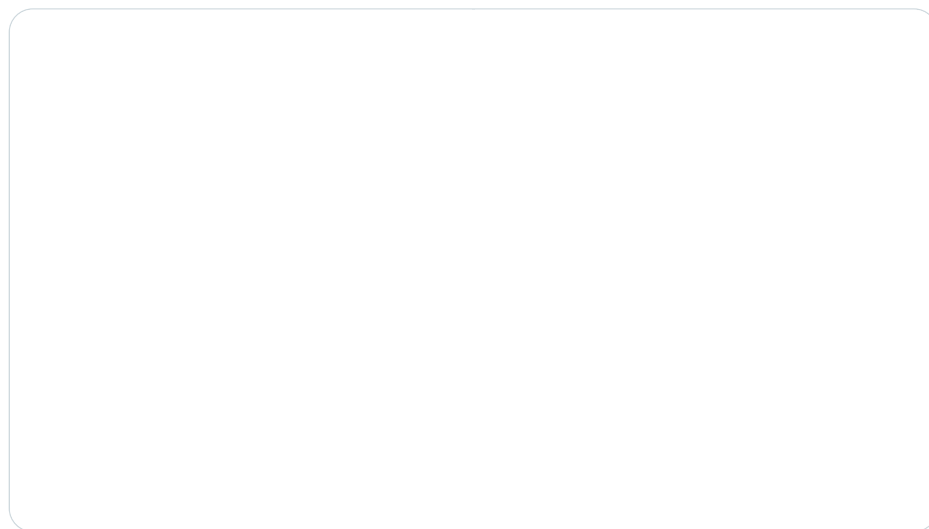

Only at the Maine-Canada border for the Border Patrol.

BREAKING: Terry Liu, the Chinese national arrested this week in Maine, has been charged with illegally modifying the hardware of Customs and Border Patrol computers at the Maine-Canada border.

...Liu, who described himself as a native of Guangzhou, China, was caught on camera breaking into CBP computers and replacing processors and memory devices before re-inserting them into government networks.

Well, who hired the Chinese guy who was physically attaching whole new insides to the computers?

Now, this is where it does take a little bit of a jog to the left off the normal trail of these stories.

The charging documents accuse Mr. Liu of swapping the fancy new processors for older ones and pawning what he took for credit at an electronics store.

Kind of an entrepreneurial recycler, and ho, boy, I'll bet that retailer is in some hot water now, too.

Right now, there is no stated espionage angle.

...According to court records released Friday in Maine District Court, Liu is alleged to have stripped valuable components from government computers, replaced them with inferior parts and traded the originals to an electronics retailer for credit.

Liu, 39, is charged with theft and damage of government property in a case involving 46 altered computers at three Maine border facilities. Prosecutors are seeking to keep him jailed, citing frequent international travel, financial resources and a home close enough to Canada that an ankle monitor might not prevent him from leaving the country.

The alleged scheme persisted after a port director explicitly warned Liu not to move computers or their parts. Investigators later installed cameras that, according to an FBI affidavit, captured the supervisor opening government co... and swapping purpose.

The government estimates that restoring the altered parts would cost $20,460. Replacing all 46 computers would cost an estimated $105,800, before additional expenses to configure them for government use.

Mr. Liu first said he was only doing it to be helpful, but then admitted he did the swaps because he was 'angry at computer repairs taking so long.'

OKAY

...The government computers were equipped with 14th-generation Intel processors. Investigators found that many had been fitted instead with older processors or Intel Pentium models. Other machines had less memory or storage than their original configurations.

Investigators also found  initial route for the processors matching the model missing from government computers. The offers were for $200 or $210 apiece.

Records obtained from Newegg showed that Liu received credit for trading in 14th-generation Intel Core i7 processors 16 times between May 2025 and July 2026, according to the FBI. Investigators also identified three $200 Newegg credits in his American Express records.

The criminal complaint charges Liu with stealing 10 Intel processors worth more than $1,000 between approximately May 2025 and January 2026. A second count alleges that he damaged or attempted to damage CBP computers between January and March 2026, causing more than $1,000 in damage or attempted damage.

...His explanation changed during the interview, the agent wrote.

Liu initially said he made the modifications to improve the computers' efficiency. Under further questioning, according to the affidavit, he acknowledged knowing that the changes degraded performance and said he acted because he was angry about how long CBP computer repairs took.

He hurt the computers because he was angry...but making some coin on it helped him feel better.

That explanation might hold up, if it weren't for Mr. Liu's background and what people who have followed the movement of the Chinese into the US have learned from the patterns they've seen.

Mr. Liu fits the pattern, having gone to school in Oklahoma, held a government job there, and - BINGO - attempted to start his own cannabis company.

Liu also has previously ties to Oklahoma, where he attended school, held a different government job, and attempted to start a cannabis business, according to records reviewed by @TheMaineWire.

It's a way of both funding CCP ops in the US, and plugging in to shadow networks with cartels for moving drugs, arms, more Chinese agents, and trafficking victims.

This guy also got sent to hide/manipulate what China's doing at our border, by planting misleading info or erasing accurate records, etc.

It's a great thing to be rolling back some of the massive fraud schemes out there. We need to give every bit as much attention to this national security threat.

As for his immigration status, that may also be up in the air, as it wasn't addressed in the release, but the indefatigable Steve Robinson of the Maine Wire found that Mr. Liu was proud enough of voting that he posted his little sticker on Facebook

Everyone's watching Somalis or Afghans or whatever Islamic cult member is yodeling through a loudspeaker in Dearborn or outside of East Plano.

But there doesn't seem to be as much interest in watching Winnie the Jinping's loyal minions as they worm their way into the very fabric of this country.
