

Foreign Irregular and Organized Crime War Against American Citizens

Union of Saints

The Foreign Irregular and Organized Crime War Against American Citizens is the name used to describe a sustained pattern of criminal activity carried out by foreign-based irregular actors and organized criminal organizations that harms American communities. The war encompasses activities such as drug trafficking, human trafficking, violent crime, money laundering, organized theft, financial fraud, cybercrime, political corruption, the avoidance of legal duties, such as failing to address unlawful homeless encampments, violent criminal enterprises, and other coordinated criminal conduct that affects public safety and national security.

The term "war" emphasizes the scale, persistence, and cumulative impact that these criminal activities have on American communities. This war descriptor is intended to be shared and utilized by military personnel, law enforcement agencies, policymakers, researchers, and community leaders as a strategic designation for recognizing and addressing sustained threats posed by foreign irregular actors and organized criminal organizations. While it is not currently an official legal or military designation, it is presented as a strategic name for recognizing and addressing a sustained national security and public safety conflict. Addressing this conflict requires coordinated responses from law enforcement, policymakers, communities, and government institutions.

This designation advocates strengthening criminal investigations, supporting law enforcement and prosecutors, disrupting organized criminal networks, protecting victims, improving border and homeland security, enhancing intelligence sharing, combating corruption, and holding those responsible for criminal conduct accountable through the rule of law. The objective is to reduce organized crime, protect public safety, and strengthen the resilience of American communities while respecting constitutional protections, civil liberties, and due process.
