- China owned factory farm in the USA WH Group Smithfield Farms COVID-19 pandemic, during which several large-scale outbreaks occurred at their meat processing facilities. Key details about the COVID-19 outbreaks at Smithfield facilities: Sioux Falls, South Dakota plant: This plant became the largest COVID-19 hotspot in the US at one point, with nearly 1,300 workers infected and four deaths reported. Company Response and Criticism: Smithfield faced criticism for its handling of the outbreak, with allegations that they failed to adequately protect workers, initially delayed providing masks and promoting social distancing, and may have incentivized sick employees to come to work with bonus pay. OSHA Investigation and Settlement: The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) investigated the Sioux Falls plant and issued a citation for "failing to protect employees from exposure to the coronavirus". Smithfield settled with OSHA for a $13,494 fine and agreed to implement enhanced safety measures and an infectious disease preparedness plan. Lawsuits: Smithfield faced lawsuits related to the outbreaks, including claims that the company made false and misleading statements about worker safety and a potential meat shortage to maintain sales. Worker Perspectives: Workers and their advocates reported concerns about unsafe working conditions, including crowded spaces, lack of protective equipment, and fear of illness. Other potential outbreaks or issues: Swine Flu in Mexico: There was a swine flu outbreak in a Mexican state where Smithfield has farms. Animal Welfare and Pollution: Smithfield has also faced criticism and legal challenges related to animal cruelty and pollution. It's important to note that while the information provided focuses on the COVID-19 outbreaks, other issues like environmental concerns and worker conditions.
