

Americas Founding

Even though American independence was declared on July 4, 1776, some American families had already been here for generations, with ancestral roots extending back as far as the 1400s or earlier. This long history reflects the time, development, perseverance, and resilience of the many cultures, communities, and families that came together over centuries to form one nation and, ultimately, one union.