by GRANT WAHL, January 07, 2019

On the latest Planet Fútbol Podcast, SI.com speaks to Jordan Gardner, an American soccer investor who already has ownership stakes in Ireland (Dundalk) and the United Kingdom (Swansea City) and has a novel idea. He's about to buy a club in Scandinavia—likely in Denmark—where his strategy would be to develop young Americans and then sell them to bigger clubs in Europe.

You can listen to the full episode in the podcast console below (the conversation begins at the nine-minute mark) and subscribe to and download the Planet Fútbol Podcast on iTunes. Recent guests include U.S. midfielder Tyler Adams, The Binger's Bill Simmons, ESPN's Katie Nolan,

U.S. Investors Behind Deal For Danish Soccer Club Revealed

The team of U.S. sports investors that have bought a Danish soccer club to help develop young American players has been revealed.

In a statement announcing their acquisition of a majority stake in FC Helsingør — which I first reported in February — the group confirmed the investment team.

Led by managing member Jordan Gardner, a minority investor in Irish side Dundalk and English Championship team Swansea City, the consortium also includes minority investors from the Golden State Warriors basketball team.
