Divide and Conquer

In challenging times, it is important to remember the human element in humanity. As a society, we often rely on groups, labels, and generalized perspectives to make sense of one another. This approach has a way of serving us well. However, it is easy to lose sight of the fact that each person is an individual with unique experiences and perspectives. The more we let these generalizations rule the way we see the world around us, the more we lose grip on the reality that of which we are all existing in.

When our opinions are formed only from the faces you see on screens and the voices of hosts you've never met, you are not shaping your own truth- you are inheriting a story written for you. True understanding grows in the spaces where we listen and ask questions with the intention to understand. We must allow our lived experiences and interpersonal connections to hold truth in the picture we see. It is time we allow our perspective of this world to be shaped more by the actual life you live, rather than embrace the story of a life we are told we are living.

Manifestation

When I first learned the word- I thought it was some sort of forbidden magic. However, as I've gotten older and taught myself more about abstract concepts like this, I have realized that it has always been more simple than how it's normally presented. You see, manifestation, in its definition, is simply to make something reality. Humans have been gifted with the power of manifestation and we have been able to evolve beyond the natural world because of it. Humans, time and time again, have displayed their innovation and ability to bring thought to life. We are creators- we are manifestors.

Manifestation is simply creating a path for yourself to make something a reality.

"I am hungry. I need to eat some food. I decide I would love a Turkey Pesto from Mugs Coffee House. I get my keys, drive to Mugs and place my order. Now I will be fed."

On the daily, the large majority of us intentionally put ourselves on the path to eat. By the end of the day, I pray we are all fed.

Manifestation is not calling out to God to give you what you need without any effort on your end. Manifestation is recognizing your needs and desires and intentionally putting yourself on the path to receive and achieve them. Once you mentally put yourself on the path of your desires, you are now in an optimal position to recognize what it is that you want and the opportunities that arise to boost you towards your established goals.

If you are out in the world, you will run into opportunities that will or won't excite you. If you haven't established and maintained a dialogue within yourself of what you want to achieve- you may unintentionally allow these opportunities pass you by. You likely will not be in the right position to see the opportunity for what it can mean for your goals- you never established them!

Manifestation is not a witchy spell or a cheat code to magically get what you want with ease. It's the quiet trust that what is meant for you will unfold most beautifully through intentionality, patience, and the courage to set intentions in the first place. It's aligning your body, mind, and soul with your deepest purpose and desires. It's embracing the blessings already present in your life, while knowing you are worthy of even more to come.

Manifestation is the art of meeting life halfway. Setting your course and walking your path with intentionality and purpose. Holding patience and trust when things get tough and embracing opportunities as they come to you.
