

ON AIR NOW:
2:00am-11:59pm Fox Sports Weekend

NFL Extends Virtual Offseason, Scraps Minicamps Through June

NFL commissioner Roger Goodell announces NFL team owners have reached agreement on a new league policy that requires players to stand for the national anthem or remain in the locker room during the NFL owner's spring meeting Wednesday, May 23, 2018, in Atlanta. (AP Photo/John Bazemore)

The National Football League has extended its virtual offseason, and has also reportedly decided against in-person minicamps through the rest of this month.

According to the NFL Network's Tom Pelissero, the teams were notified on Thursday that the virtual offseason would be extended through June 26.

Tom Pelissero ✓
@TomPelissero

The NFL has notified teams the virtual period for offseason work will be extended through June 26, but there will be no in-person minicamps this month, per sources. Expected, and now official.

10:41 AM · Jun 11, 2020 ⓘ

---

👍 590    💬 305 people are Tweeting about this

Pelissero added that teams could extend their virtual offseason if they so choose, or discontinue it, as some are already doing.

"The NFL and NFLPA continue to work together on remaining protocols to create a safe reopening for training camp," Pelissero reported.

YOU MAY ALSO LIKE...

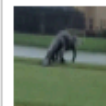

Trump supporters to host "Million MAGA March" in Washington, D.C.

Miami Marlins hire Kim Ng as MLB's first female general manager

Florida high school coach charged for fraudulently taking nearly $1 million in coronavirus relief money

MUST WATCH: Huge alligator spotted roaming Florida golf course

Javion Posey breaks team QB rushing record as FAU defeats FIU in the Shula Bowl