#6. Anise Star

Anise Star has a powerful and licorice-like scent, giving a strong top note.

Blends With: Lavender, Pine, Orange, Rosewood, Clove, and Cinnamon.

Product Abstract: A small to medium evergreen tree of the magnolia family, reaching up to 8m (26ft). The fruits are harvested before they ripen, then sun dried. Tough-skinned and rust colored, the seed pods measure up to 3 cm long. The Japanese plant this tree in their temples and on tombs and use the pounded bark as incense. This essential oil may solidify, and if so, must be heated to be brought back to a liquid state. This attests to the purity of the oil.

#44. Kyphi

Kyphi is a compound incense that was used in Ancient Egypt for religious and medical purposes. The scent of this kyphi is sweet, with a honey undertone throughout. The smell is extremely pleasant and makes you want to take big breaths of it. It is especially good for consecrating objects or a room. The smell is somehow narcotic and brings to mind forgotten days of the past, creating a comforting space. Breathing it in, one becomes aware of one's breath. The sleepiness that all the versions of kyphi cause is here joined by hearing voices talking quietly instead of seeing visions. You can feel the shift from day to night that is associated with kyphi. This would make this kyphi especially good for works focusing on transition, especially gradual ones.
