Donovan Literary Services

The Fragrance of a Girl's World is filled with inspirational admonitions for girls, and promotes concepts and approaches to life that is geared to young female readers on the cusp of coming of age.

Chapters organize these inspirational observations by subject (modesty, integrity, family, natural beauty, and downtime, to name just a few), making it easy for girls to easily browse the book for enlightening insights.

Parents expecting a conservative viewpoint will be delighted by the contemporary observations that many of these seemingly traditional chapters embrace, such as the section about natural beauty, which offers pointed discussions on makeup: "Makeup can assist a girl by helping her bring out her natural beauty. Emerging makeup is natural makeup with fewer or no chemicals that help to nourish the skin and help to enhance rather than hide, cover up, or transform. If makeup transforms the way you look naturally, then that makeup helps to deceive and does not show the real you."

Likewise, the section on 'If You Leave Life, Life Will Leave You' provides wisdom on how to deal with overall life challenges: "Everything you do and say should have a purpose. Pick flowers and not fights./Do not ignore kindness.

If you do not run from trouble, trouble will run after you./Look for goodness in everything and you will find it. Handle your Scandal."

Punctuated by colorful flower drawings throughout and promoting good physical and mental health and a greater understanding of what it is to be uniquely female, The Fragrance of a Girl's World offers insights on values, life goals and focus, and choices that emphasize kindness, graciousness, and a deeper understanding of how one's perspective changes outcomes for self and others.

The Fragrance of a Girl's World is the perfect item of choice to gift a young woman coming of age, but its inspirational message will reach for all ages as it surveys the foundations of building a positive life and maintaining a purposeful focus on different choices and their consequences for building that world.

Girls can grow up to be 'flowers' in a world filled with 'weeds'. This book shows them how.

The Fragrance of a Girl's World

Manhattan Book Review

As Donna Kristine Manley notes in her introduction to The Fragrance of a Girl's World, "Every girl deserves her world to be as pleasant and as stress-free as possible." Of course, given the various difficulties and obstacles that girls are likely to encounter as they grow up, achieving such a comfortable world is no easy matter, which is why Manley has written this book. In it, she offers thirty-three bite-sized pieces of wisdom, wit, and advice, which she characterizes as fragrances, intended to "uplift, encourage, and motivate" girls as they seek to find their place in the world.

The first of the fragrances that Manley introduces is "The Fragrance of God," and it's clear that her faith in God has provided her with much strength and comfort in her own life. She recommends the power of faith to readers and makes reference to the role of God in relation to several of the other fragrances, so while the book is not specifically targeted toward Christians, it is likely that readers who share the author's faith will get the most out of the proffered wisdom. Manley also offers advice concerning support structures other than faith that girls are likely to rely on, namely family and friends. Her guidance here is sound, stressing the need to remain true to oneself and to be prepared to make difficult decisions when necessary.

A good number of the fragrances described within The Fragrance of a Girl's World can be considered the building blocks of a sound character. For instance, Manley highlights the importance of integrity and having a strong moral compass, and she stresses the benefits of humility. However, while it is important to "let the inner you shine naturally," the following advice is much more controversial: "Do not push yourself forward; your gifts and your talents will do that for you." Although in an ideal world natural talent will speak for itself, the real world is still far from ideal (or equal) and girls should be encouraged to be their own biggest fans and to highlight their talents and achievements. Still, when Manley moves on to discuss the importance of confidence, she is on much firmer ground.

Some of the fragrances are more practical in nature and intended to help girls set themselves up well for the future. For example, Manley stresses the importance of working for what you own and practicing responsible ownership, and she emphasizes the need to save in order to always be independent. She also discusses the need to protect your physical and mental health so that you are able to succeed in life. It's not all burdensome and weighty stuff though, as Manley recommends the benefits of socializing, travel, bargain hunting, and downtime, among other fun yet still edifying activities.

While the theme of fragrances represents a good means of unifying the advice contained within the book, it isn't totally successfully maintained throughout, particularly when it comes to the lists, mottos, illustrations, and poetry found towards the end. The Fragrance of a Girl's World is a valuable endeavor and Manley has done a good job of assembling mostly sound advice intended to benefit girls and young women.

The Fragrance of a Girl's World

"The Fragrance of a Girl's World," by Donna Kristine Manley, is an award-winning, encouraging guide to help girls recognize their uniqueness and enjoy life. Comprised of 33 meaningful affirmations ranging from "The Fragrance of God" to "The Fragrance of a Great Work Ethic," this book serves as a beautifully conceived self-help tool. As you read this compact book full of golden petals of life advice, you are reminded to recognize and savor the simple yet profound things around you. In today's challenging times, this book serves as a way for girls to become grounded in who they are, embracing and savoring their individuality and using their gifts and attributes to the fullest.

Manley brings a positive message to girls who may not receive guidance from parents or other invested adults, and who may not have access to good role models. For girls who are confused, have doubts, fears, or who just need a compass in life, this partially faith-based book brings attention to the unique qualities in each and every one, and encourages girls to appreciate family, friends, and the ability to make choices about who they want to be and become.

I like the analogy that the author uses, which compares girls to being flowers in a land full of weeds. Weeds represent the negative things girls may encounter in life: Bad relationships, self-esteem, bullying, abuse, etc. In bad times, it helps if girls know who they are, know their worth, and can find strength within and without to meet and navigate challenges. Ideas about integrity, honesty, self-worth, among others, are ideas every girl needs to hear, but so many never do, for many reasons, be it a neglectful home life, or lack of positive guidance.

There is a strong message that girls can use their talents and skills as a tool to a good life and successful future. Some of the ideas may sound foreign to girls, like the idea of taking responsibility for your actions. But these are lessons girls need to hear if they haven't already.

The many references to flowers and their unique fragrances brings to mind the diversity found in girls. No two girls are alike, and this book celebrates that. Besides containing nuggets of wisdom and encouragement, this book offers resources and concrete tips, like learning about other cultures through travel, and even a poem, "Lovely, Lovely". Even though the book has the word "girl" in the title, it can also be enjoyed by adult women too, or mothers of young girls wanting to instill positivity in their daughters. "The Fragrance of a Girl's World", by Donna Kristine Manley, shows girls how to make the most of girlhood.
