This project is an attempt to determine the age of the Charlie and Mary Pashia house in Washington County, Missouri. This determination inevitably involves more than researching one building. The histories of families and areas are involved; information is varied in both scope and availability. Fortunately, the amount of information available in Washington County is impressive. Courthouse records are, for the for part, in good condition and well-maintained. Many area people, interested in local history, are generous with their help.

Charlie and Mary Pashia live in a house they know belonged to Charlie's grandfather, Paschal Duclos. Before that, they are unsure. The house is located on Part 3 of Lot 23 in the Old Mines Concession of Washington County. The Concession dates to the 1700's when the Spanish Government gave to the French citizens of Upper Louisiana (which included what is now Missouri) grants to lands they had settled and mined when the territory was in French hands. When Missouri came under American rule most of the settlers stayed. In 1836, the U. S. Congress confirmed titles to lands granted by previous governments. (fig. 1)

The Duclos (later Pashia) land first entered the family in 1841 when Antoine Duclos bought it from F. B. Valle' for $600. The Valle' family was prominent in St. Genevieve and had a number of mining ventures in the Old Mines area. Valle' was named as an inhabitant in the original Old Mines Concession, making it likely there was a house somewhere on the land that was used at least as a part-time home. The deed includes "the tract of Land together with all and Singular the buildings (priviledges?) and appurtenances thereto belonging." (fig. 2) However, it gives no further detail as to where any buildings existed, or even if they did, for certain.

Some other deeds in the Concession of 1838 list the sales of several nearby lots and provide comparison. The settlement of the Simon Block estate included prices on several holdings: Lot 24, $700; Lots 26-27, $1600; Lot 30, $550. These were all of the same configuration and size as Lot 23. The Block deed describes them as "lots or tracts of land" with no mention of buildings or appurtenances. Though it does seem likely there was some sort of dwelling on Lot 23 before 1838, there is no record of just where or what it may have been.

It can be said that by 1846 there was a substantial dwelling on the land. Less than two months before his death Antoine Duclos divided and sold, mostly to his family, Lot 23. (fig. 3) These deeds were made July 11, 1846; the sales to family members were for nominal sums, probably to save on inheritance taxes as well as arguments.

The most interesting of the July 11th deeds is the one to Paschal, Antoine's youngest son. It is the only one to mention a residence, the forty acres "being the same place on which the said Antoine Duclos and Seiciel his wife at present resides." The forty acre farm which is sold to Paschal here is the same piece of land on which the Pashia home stands today. (fig. 4)

There is even more substantial proof of a house in a deed dated September 13, 1846 (fig. 5), which grants Cecelia Duclos, now a widow, life residence on "the following described property to wit the farm and Mansion house on which the Said Cecelia Duclos relict of the said Antoine Duclos deceased at present resides". Unless Cecelia had moved in the two months between deeds, the same property sold to Paschal contained a 'Mansion house'. The oldest room of the Pashia house today, about twenty feet square, is hardly what we would call a mansion by today's standards, but it could be that the room is what remains of a larger house or simply that the Duclos family saw their good solid log home as a 'mansion'.

There is a question as to why the heirs would grant their mother life residence to property that had been sold to Paschal. The filing dates on the two documents offer one explanation. Paschal Duclos' deed was made on July 11, 1846, but it was not filed until July of 1847, presumably after Cecelia had also died or made other living arrangements. There is the slim possibility that the 'mansion house' was located on the twenty or so acres unaccounted for by the four deeds listed in figure 3. No other instruments from Antoine and Cecelia Duclos were found to be filed as of the 1870's and it is possible that they kept that property as part of the farm. Also, there is mention in the deed to Cecelia of "all the vacant land belonging to the estate of the said Antoine Duclos" so it is entirely possible those acres were not sold in 1846.

The probate records of Paschal Duclos indicate that he died in 1854, leaving a widow, Julia, and an infant son, Paschal. That infant son was Charlie Pashia's grandfather. The probate file for young Paschal includes tax receipts for the early 1870's which list two parcels of land, 45 acres in Lot 23 Old Mines Concession, and 41.7 acres in a nearby section. (fig. 6) The Old Mines property is valued at more than twice the other, indicating a substantial building or other improvements on that site. Taken together, the information found in the various documents shows that there has continually been a house located on Part 3 of Lot 23 since 1846 and quite possibly before. The house located there now is almost certainly at least part of that house.

The house today consists of three main rooms, a kitchen on the north, which possibly began as a separate structure, a bedroom, which according to Charlie Pashia was added in the early 1900's, and the main room, which appears to be part of the original house. ~~A semi-enclosed porch on the east~~ connects the three and a small porch on the west has been enclosed. The current roof replaces the original, which was lost in a storm, but it may be possible to determine the original pitch and configuration after a closer examination of the house and attic space.

The bedroom addition presents a fascinating blend of modern and traditional practices and materials. The small, three to four inch logs which at first glance appear to be split for siding are actually load-bearing walls. This is a twentieth century vertical log structure.

This room, added by friends and family, uses centuries-old building practices which had been almost completely abandoned by the time this room was built. (fig 7) This construction method is a vernacular form of what the French called Poteaux Sur Sole (post on sole) and while it is not as well crafted as those of Ste. Genevieve in the 1800's, it is definitely of the same form and cultural heritage.

The wall logs are notched at the top and bottom to allow a fairly close fit to the round log sill and hand hewn top plate. They are nailed in place and tapered slightly towards the top. Behind the logs there is mud and straw daubing held in place by hand split laths. Over that is a layer of white finish plaster. The seven-inch log joists are worked to provide a level surface for the flooring and to fit over the sill log. The ceiling joists are small round logs, cut at an angle where they meet the top plate. Milled floorboards and ship lapped ceiling boards, along with the galvanized tin roof, are twentieth century conveniences.

The door to the main room, through the porch on the east, seems to be a back door, but it is possible that area roads were much different when the house was built. Ray Brasseur feels the road to the east of the house (marked in brown, fig. 8) was once the major thoroughfare in the area. Several things make this likely. The road runs along a ridge which would have provided better and easier traveling than the current route, Highway 21. And it would have been much less susceptible to flooding and washouts.

The placement of the entrance to the house on the east side indicates that side was regarded as the more important facade. This makes more sense if the main area road were in that direction. It may also explain why Antoine and Cecilia would choose what now seems one of the more remote spots on which to build their house.

Additionally, when they subdivided they cut forty acres off the east end of Lot 23. If there were no good road to the east, it would make no sense to isolate that parcel. Assuming eastern access, it is more convenient in keeping the farm in a compact square instead of dividing it into the long narrow strips needed to ensure access in other parts of the concession. (fig. 9)

Further evidence of the desirability of the eastern part of the concession is found in the prices of lots sold from the Simon Block estate:

Lot 10	East of Creek, 163 acres	$713.12
	West of Creek, 164 acres	565.80
Lot 11	East of Creek, 163 acres	573.44
	West of Creek, 164 acres	431.32
Lot 13	East of Creek, 160 acres	680.00
	West of Creek, 140 acres	296.00

Certainly other factors such as buildings and topography influence price, but there is a definite bias for the eastern portions of the lots.

This project's aim, absolutely dating the construction of the Paschal house, has not been realized. An informed guess within the ten years before 1846 is probably as close as possible. The recorded history of the home was, and will remain incomplete. But no less interesting.
