

HIGH ALERT

The Yankees put us on High Alert Tuesday night by picking up their 13th number, the rather pedestrian 6. They are one number away from fame and fortune for Matt Durocher. Normally I let you know about these happenings right away but experience tells me nothing happens right away when some team lands there. It's never easy. They need the 10. If they land there mid-week - - you will be alerted right away. Remember, we keep running it until a 2nd team scores all 14 numbers so we got a ways to go before summer vacation for me and Bob.

As advertised last week, the #2 fell off the board for all 30 teams on Monday, Not predicted was the #1 coming off on Thursday, but it did. Now if your team scores 1,2 or 4 the rest of the way, ignore it.

Tampa started the week in 1st place in their division with the 2nd best record in Baseball. Cool, no? But they are last place in our pool. Mike Rovetto thinks not so cool.

The Nationals banged out the 10 and 13 this week to brighten Louis Adams' spirits.

11 teams failed to grab any of their needed scores. Around the same as last week.

If I told you that 4 teams still need the 0, without looking you may guess it was the Dodgers, Yanks, Cubs and Phil's. How about the A's, Twins, White Sox and Orioles. Crazy-no?

The Mets had the most prolific week, checking 3 boxes off their "to do" list. Amazing! They may have even won a game or two- -more amazing! Like a few other teams with exactly 11 scores in the bank, they need the big three (11-13) so don't get too excited.

Talk soon - - maybe very soon.
