

WAITING GAME

Some big scores on Monday of last week, two 16's and two 12's. Only Miami's 12 checked a box. One of only two double digit scores of importance for the week.

The Nationals scored 9 runs on Tuesday, putting us on Double High Alert as they join the Yankees in the exclusive (for now) 1 Away Club. They need the 13 so I'm not listing them as a favorite, but it's OK for Louis Adams to dream, yes?

The #'s 5 and 7 have now been hit by all 30 teams, rendering two more scores worthless the rest of the way.

No needed scores hit at all Thursday and Friday. Slim pickin's this week. Only 8 boxes checked off through Friday. Not much better over the weekend. 16 teams failed to score any needed numbers and only 14 scores hit all week, no team with more than 1 box checked.

That means we are playing the waiting game, with two teams 1 away and just about everyone else with 11 or 12 scores in the bank. It can get very crowded at the top this week unless something happens quick for the Yanks or Nats.

Keep you posted mid week if anything interesting comes about.
