

Business Owners Reap Large Profits by Looking Backward

Kilgore, Texas - April, 24 2018 – Most business owners look to the future when planning to grow their bottom line, but a backward focus can be just as profitable.

The government hands out billions every year in business incentives. That's good news, but the bad news is only 5% of eligible companies ever claim the money they are entitled to receive.

"If you thought the government was holding a check with your name on it, would you want to know about that?" Asks Barry Herring, Executive Director of IncentiveCredits.com. "I ask business owners, 'Is there someone at the Internal Revenue Service you're so fond of that you want to leave them lots of money?' The answer is always No!"

By securing available credits and incentives, a business owner may be able to avoid paying unnecessary taxes, obtain immediate tax refunds, manage overhead, drive down effective tax rates, and improve earnings and shareholder value.

Last year 5% of eligible US businesses split more than $12 billion in government revenue giveaways. And 90% of those checks were mailed out to billion dollar companies.

Unlike business deductions, tax credits offset federal and state tax liabilities dollar-for-dollar, and directly affect a business owner's bottom line.

Recent tax laws are taxpayer-friendly and bring valuable benefits. In addition to federal tax credits, many states offer a state tax credit as well.

These incentives, credits, rebates, and rewards are designed to help businesses develop, grow, and succeed. That creates jobs and grows the economy, so the government sees incentive credits as a sound investment.

"Have you ever reached into a couch cushion and pulled out money?" asks Herring. "We all have, and it makes us smile every time, right? Well, we reach into dozens of government programs and pull out serious cash for small business owners. That makes everyone smile!"
