

Daisy's Discovery

One day, as Daisy was walking home, a mysterious, glowing gold object in an alley caught her eye. She was curious as to what it could be but decided it would be best to just continue home. When she got home, she told her parents what she had seen and her parents thought she was delusional when she told them that she strongly believed it was a portal. The next day, Daisy decided to walk to school earlier than usual to see if it was in fact a portal and if it was still there or if it was just her imagination playing tricks on her. To her pleasant surprise, she not only found the portal she saw the day before but she found THREE more portals! They were all different colors; the original portal she saw was gold, the other one was pink, one was blue, and the last one was red. Daisy was curious so she stuck her head into the blue portal about three quarters of the way and saw a school of fish. Suddenly, a big great white shark passed in front of her face so she pulled her head back out. She then peeked into the gold portal and saw men with pickaxes mining stones, diamonds, emerald, gold, and silver. She moved on to the pink one and saw cotton candy trees and candy grass everywhere. Finally, she looked inside the red one but it was shining so bright, it almost blinded her. It was a golden kingdom. She had been looking through all of the portals for so long that she lost track of time and was late for school. She ran as fast as she could but she was still late to school. She tried to sneak into her physics class but her teacher caught her and gave her detention after school.

On her way home from detention, she walked past the alley again and decided to walk into the pink portal. She was immediately drawn to the cotton candy trees and ran over to them. She wanted to try the leaves. She reached for a leaf and it was as soft as a cloud, just as she had fantasized. The cotton candy leaf tasted as good as pumpkin pie with whip cream on Thanksgiving Day. She could also smell the chocolate aroma as the wind brushed through her hair. Back at home, Daisy's parents were worried because she hadn't come back for hours. They were so worried that they had to call the police to see if anyone had seen her. One of her friends came forward and said that she remembered seeing her walk into the alley. Daisy's parents recalled that she had told them about the portals in the alley so they ran to the alley to look for her. A few minutes later, they found the portals and would now have to guess which portal she entered. Without hesitation, they entered the pink portal. The minute they saw the portal close behind them, they regretted going in together because they didn't know how to get back to the mortal world. However, their goal at the moment was to find Daisy.

After almost an hour of searching, they couldn't find Daisy and were starting to give up. At the same time, Daisy was trying to find a way out of the dimension when she began to hear a whisper in her ear calling her name. Daisy was trying to figure out who it was calling her name and started to realize it sounded a lot like her parents. She then saw something as she was running around trying to find where the noise was coming from. Daisy and her parents finally ended up finding each other! They hugged tight and cried of relief. They then realized that they were stuck in this dimension since one of them didn't stay in the mortal world to pull them out. So they decided to make the best of it and started to gather materials to make a house for them to live in. After a couple of weeks of building their house, they started to adapt and actually began liking it there. It was much more peaceful and quiet than their home back in the mortal world. Once they were comfortable in their new house, they ended up living there for two years.

One day, a friend of theirs came through the portal and was able to escort them back out to visit for a little bit. They were so excited to see all of their friends they hadn't seen in two years. As they exited the portal, it closed and completely disappeared. Daisy looked at her parents in complete shock. How would they get back to their new home?! Her parents smiled and looked at her and said "There's no place like home". Daisy ran off with her friends while her parents looked at the now empty wall with gratitude. They walked home, their true home that is.
