

End of Session:

Dear constituent,

This month marks the end of our first session of Parliament since the election last October. It's been an eventful eight months, and despite many obstacles, I was able to accomplish much in my first session as your Member of Parliament. I encourage you to click the link below to read a full report on all I've done to represent you this past session.

Work in the House of Commons: <https://jeremypatzer.com/first-session-parliament>

Unfortunately, the House of Commons will remain suspended until at least September, with the exception of a few meetings over the summer. This means we'll have gone half a year with no regular house sittings, and limited government accountability in a time of unprecedented spending.

History has proven time and time again that freedom, liberty, and democratic government are the surest path to prosperity. I will continue to advocate for the reconvening of the House so that we can hold the Trudeau Government to account.

Patented Medicines Review Board:

Our Conservative caucus was recently successful at encouraging the federal government to delay the planned implementation of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board (PMPRB) regulatory changes. The changes, which were scheduled to come into effect on July 1, have now been postponed until January 1, 2021.

This delay is an opportunity to better consult with Canadian patients. My colleague, Matt Jeneroux has launched a website to consult with patients over the course of this 6-month delay, and I encourage you to share your concerns there:

All feedback will be reviewed, and a detailed report of our findings will be presented to the federal government in the fall.

Compassionate Palliative Care:

A critical conversation that needs to come out of the COVID-19 outbreak is the need for quality palliative care. Prior to COVID-19, the Liberal Government presented Bill C-7 before the House, which was intended to determine the safeguards surrounding euthanasia. One of the many concerns I have with Bill C-7, however, is that it does nothing to address palliative care. COVID-19 has put long-term care and palliative care under the spotlight, with around 80 percent of COVID related deaths coming from care homes . . .
