The collecting and showing of model horses is a serious pursuit of perfection, duplication and artistry. Showing model horses is beyond the toy aspect, since it takes great skill and knowledge to achieve the detail and realism needed to depict the likeness of a real horse. Anyone who has an interest in horses can find a niche in the world of model horses. The world of model horses is both entertaining and educational. It is for equine lovers of all ages. They are especially adaptable for people who do not have horses and ones who may be allergic to real horses.

Showing model horses can be a total learning experience. A good working knowledge of correct conformation, anatomy, proper tack and attire, horse movement, breeds and colors may be needed. It can involve many different skills; such as, collecting, sculpturing, painting and tack making. The only limitations are your knowledge, skill and imagination. The ultimate goal is taking a real horse, doing a specified action, freeze it in time and shrink it to model size. Realism and correctness are your goals.

The showing of model horses started in the mid-1960's, first with the photo show and later the "live" show. For a photo show, a picture is taken of your model at halter or performance and the photo is sent in to be judged. This permits people from all over the country to do their showing through the mail without leaving their home. A "live" show or model horse exhibition is where the actual model is on display and judged.

TO GET STARTED IN THE SHOWING OF MODEL horses, the following is suggested:

- Learn your craft
- Study live horses, what they do and how they do it.
- Study live horse show rules and information.
- Subscribe to horse/breed magazines.
- Establish a notebook of photos, clippings and information as a reference for color and markings, and breed types and performance action.
- Attend real horse shows.

As you get into the hobby, you may want to subscribe to a model horse magazine. The information contained in these magazines will help you keep up with the world of model horses. They usually have a listing of various model horse clubs that are available. As you progress, you may want to join a club that best fits your needs, interests and expectations. The following is a sample of model horse magazines and information sources that are available. (This list is by no means complete).

The models are generally made of Tenite acetate (not plastic) and can be heated, melted and remolded to desired proportion and form. Then, through the use of special fillers and sculpting techniques, the ordinary can be transformed into the extraordinary. An elaborate RRH model will have repositioned legs, neck and carved ears and frogs, added on veins, chestnuts and shoes. It will then be painted in oils or acrylics and be finished with a fine mohair mane and tail. Real horse hair is rarely used, since it is too coarse.

Fees for an elaborate ready-made model (RRH) may go into the hundreds of dollars. The majority will cost less than $100. All of the tack is handmade, not mass-produced. Thus, expect to pay for quality work.

In choosing a model (factory or RRH) consider the following quality factors:

- Is the model suitable for the breed and type of class in which you intend to show?
- Does the model have good conformation? If remade, does it have smooth seams and finish and free of irregularities?
- Is the color and finish even, realistic, natural color, good coverage, good clarity/resolution of markings?
- Look at the detail of the eyes, hooves and markings.
- Does it have a realistic look, anatomy, position and poise that presents a pretty picture?
- The actual condition of the model should be free of nicks, chips, obvious breaks, rubs and scratches.
- If tack and/or props are included, they should be in exacting proportions to be ideal. Again, realism is the key - looks like a "shrunk down" version of the real item. It should be made from quality material, sized to fit the model and neatness in appearance.
- If you have not seen the model, ask to see a photo and closely inspect the photo. Ideally, photos from more than one angle are the best.
- If the model is not currently in production, how rare is it? This factor is of more consideration for collectable items.
- The actual market value should also be considered.

The following general criteria are used in judging a model horse exhibition:

- A judge can be a person with a basic knowledge of horses and horsemanship that can place models based on "correctness appearance and appropriateness" for each class.
- Model horses are judged using the same criteria as real ones, with a few added features taking into account that a model is frozen in suspension. Much attention is paid to detail and realism.
- Halter Classes are judged on:
  - Basic good conformation.
  - Overall suitability (correct conformational type color) of the model to the breed.
  - Realism, so it looks more real than the other models.
  - Workmanship, as in any other type of art or sculpture.
  - Detail, the more the better
  - Color being realistic and attractive.

- For Performance classes you should depict a major action of the class. The position of the model is analyzed as to the appropriateness for the class. For example, a standing model should not be shown in front of a jump. It would be considered a refusal. It is best to depict the principal part/action of the Performance Class.
- The tack is part of the judging also for Performance classes. It should be the proper tack for the class and fit correctly.
- Props/obstacles add realism to the picture. They are required in many events, such as trail, speed, jumper, working cow horse, etc. The ones displayed with your model should be correct for the class and be in the proper proportion.
- The more the model appears to be doing the required activity, the better it will place. Dolls are not required, but they may be used to enhance the overall picture.
- The model horse judges are not to handle the models. Only the model owners or designated show person may handle the models.
- A model will not be disqualified for some bad feature, but placed at the bottom of the class and reasons given as to why placed there.
- Any make or model composition is permissible. Keep in mind that no one model is perfect for all events. It is not how many classes you enter, but is the model suitable for that class?
- Remember, it is only an opinion of one person, just as in horse shows. But, you must respect that opinion.
