what is most meaningful to an individual or to their caregiver.”

The Challenges of Autism

Autism Spectrum Disorder can be as varied as individuals themselves. Both in degree and in specifics, the manifestations of autism can present unique obstacles, which in turn call for tailored treatment. High Point ABA creates individualized intervention goals and behavioral supports that are uniquely suited to each child.

A Team Approach

High Point ABA works with caregivers, from parents, to daycare centers, striving for a team-based approach in helping youth on the autism spectrum. For parents who suspect their child is on the spectrum, the first course of action is to seek out a diagnostic evaluation. If a child is found to be on the spectrum, High Point ABA can work with parents and caregivers to develop an action plan. “Applied Behavior Analysis is data-driven and inherently evidence-based, because we’re making decisions around intervention that are directly informed by the data we collect.”

Caregivers, and their input regarding goals for their children, are crucial to the process. “We may be experts in behavior, but parents are experts in their children. Nobody knows a child better than their caregiver. It is through this shared expertise that we create positive outcomes.” High Point ABA’s team approach means that caregiver training is just as important as direct child therapy. “Caregiver training equips caregivers with the tools that they need to understand why challenging behavior may be occurring, and how to effectively manage it.”

High Point ABA accepts both NY Medicaid and private insurance. From initial assessment, they can determine a recommended schedule for therapy, integrated into a child’s specific routine and environment. Seeing a Need For Services in the Area

Ms. Greene saw a need to establish High Point ABA in the Hudson Valley area, based on a shortage of home-based ABA services for individuals on the autism spectrum. Ms. Greene earned a graduate degree in Social Welfare from UCLA, and a Bachelors Degree in Psychology from Barnard College at Columbia University. She has worked as a clinical leader across various care models, including early intervention clinics, a large healthcare organization, and a childhood mental health platform.

“Upon moving to Rhinebeck several years ago, I found that the access to ABA services I was accustomed to seeing in large urban areas, was sorely missing.” With this, she was inspired to utilize her decade of experience to bring high quality supportive services to the area.
