VAGABOND IMAGES

I am Mike Dodson, and Vagabond Images is my photography and post-production work.

I came into photography 20 years ago - my father taught me the basics when he gave me his 1968 Nikkormat FS, and I started using and abusing film until digital changed my game about 10 years ago, and I moved to Canon.

A significant part of my youth was mispent in the metal, goth and punk scenes of the 1980s and 90s, and from that I developed a love of music, mischief, noir films and hidden corners, which has informed my work and approach.

My style is influenced by German expressionism, Film Noir, and Gonzo journalism - it's been described variously as dirty, unique, Sizz, and - perhaps most accurately - fucked. I like a Dutch Angle, I drink too much, I like stories, and have a love of music, mischief, and hidden corners. All of these inform and influence my thinking and approach, and thus my work.

Vagabond Images because my photographs rarely fit 'The Rules' or into photographic essays, and each one tends to stand on it's own merit as opposed to necessarily being a study in technique or of subject. I often use them as base items, interpreting them and transforming them from pure photographs to become images.

One of my favourite bands is New Model Army, among whose work the song Vagabonds you should actively seek out and play at a high volume - if you don't like it, you are wrong.
