

George Hill

George has been riding a bike since they were 2 years old and through growing up in country towns, George benefited from the freedom and safety of riding to and from school, the local shops and mountain bike and BMX tracks. When George began high school in Adelaide, they rode their bike less and less because of the lack of safety in suburban streets and main roads.

Today, George is an early career Civil Engineer and Environment Consultant at Arup, who has mustered the courage to commute in and out of the Adelaide CBD every day, battling for priority in a sea of cars at peak hour.

George works with Councils, State Government Departments and Infrastructure Agencies to solve challenges of urban heat, drought, flooding and housing shortages with integrated, blue-green solutions to unlock, cooler, greener and more equitable cities across Australia.

George is eager to become a BikeSA Board Director to enact real change for kids and commuters, advocating for cycling to be a viable transport option, unlocking safe infrastructure for resilient communities in the face of climate change and economic pressures.
