“Your protest, your refusal to be run over, your local actions, added to those of others world over, will slowly tilt this world toward more justice. People will share the story of this campaign and be inspired by it to launch their own...After you have time to rest, I hope that you will get up and sing and also dance. We will be right here, right by your side, singing and dancing too. The savages will not win....My love to you all.”

“... Alice responded by saying that there are times when things are so horrible we literally lose the ability to talk about them. That is to say, in the face of suffering such as this-unspeakable suffering-we come undone. We are left bereft of words to bear witness. Constitutionally incapable of coming to anyone’s rescue, including our own. In the book, she is calling us to overcome that speechlessness. To push past it, to take a step beyond our trauma, and into the sun.

“Let me offer now a favorite saying of Hawaiians. It was uttered by one of our great chiefs before the worst battle of his life: Imua e nā poki! Forward my younger siblings And drink the bitter water A inu i ka wai ʻawa ʻawa A loa a ka lei Of opposition until we wear the lei

O ka Lanakila of Victory.”

To steal a pig from the master, for example, was about far more than the value of the pig: what mattered was ‘the actual act of stealing [it],’ through which slaves ‘outsmarted their physically powerful owners with their wits alone.”

Excerpt from Anticolonial Eruptions by Geo Maher, page 17

“Now, comrades, now is the time to decide to change sides. We must shake off the great mantle of night which has enveloped us, and reach for the light. The new day which is dawning must find us determined, enlightened and resolute. We must abandon our dreams and say farewell to our old beliefs and former friendships. Let us not lose time in useless laments or sickening mimicry.”

Excerpt from The Wretched of the Earth by Frantz Fanon, page 235

“... I am here simply because I want to thank you Ferguson activists, because you refused to drop the torch of struggle. When you were urged to go home and go back to business as usual, you said no and in the process you made Ferguson a worldwide symbol of resistance. At a time when we are urged to settle for fast solutions, easy answers, formulaic resolutions, Ferguson protesters said no. You were determined to continue to make the issues of violence against Black communities visible. You refused to believe that there were any simplistic answers and you demonstrated that you would not allow this to be buried in the graveyard that has not only claimed Black lives but also so many struggles to defend those lives.”
