

Fear

Fear comes in many volumes. Everyone has experienced fear. Fear can vary from fear of evil to fear of a bully. I have experienced fear, and so has everyone else in this world.

First, there is spiritual fear. Smart people fear God. However, this is not a fear of a mean person. This kind of fear means you have strong respect and love for God. He says if you do respect His ways, you are being smarter than when you only do what you want. When you fear God, you're being smart.

Secondly, there is fear of a bully or a mean person. The fear of a mean person is understood worldwide. When a bully or mean person hurts you, it probably means he has felt this pain in his life one too many times. He is hurting you because he is vulnerable and needs to take his pain out on someone else. Try to love him and show him a little forgiveness. When you fear him, try to know what's hurting him if you are hurt by him. A little respect and forgiveness can go a long way. After that, you might even be best friends, and you can show him how to love.

Lastly, there is fear for the unknown. Everyone fears the unknown for many reasons. You fear the unknown for the tragedies and disasters to come in life. You sit back and wonder if this is the last day of your wonderful life and if you will ever see your family and friends again. The unknown holds the unthinkable for everyone's life.

In conclusion, the different types of fear are experienced in every human being. I fear, you fear, and we all fear.
