*Flying termites – these are alates – future kings and queens of a colony, they cannot eat the timbers of your home, however the presence of them could mean that a colony is nearby ready to attack your home, or already inside somewhere. Regular inspections and maintenance can save you thousands of dollars in the long term.

*If you have an exposed slab edge around your home (visual inspection zone), as part of your timber pest maintenance, it is good practice to scan over it once per month to check for any evidence of termite damage and / or workings.

A Professional Pest Control Service – your safety

Safety for you, your family and our technicians are top priority when we arrive on site to conduct a pest treatment.

We will immediately begin to assess your home for any possible safety hazards, especially those who may have any asthma concerns, as well as small children and pets. Prior to us initiating any treatment, it is often necessary to:

- Remove or cover any pet's food bowls.
- Bird cages are moved during treatment.
- Dogs be restrained if they excite easily.
- Turn off fish tank filter and cover with a towel or similar.
- Remove children's items, such as toys or books etc from the internal walls.
- Ensure no food preparation is undertaken during the course of the treatment.
- Air-conditioning is switched off.
- Clothes have been removed from the clothes line.
- Windows are closed during internal and external treatments.

Once the treatment has been completed, please allow around 1-2 hours for any liquid products to dry. When it is dry, it is virtually harmless to human beings as the liquid becomes a film of crystals not visible to the naked eye, and as cockroaches etc walk over it, they pick it up and ingest it via their feet as they groom themselves. These products are primarily developed to target insects and some excellent improvements have been made in recent years with modern chemicals and treatment practices that are 100% safe for humans if the appropriate precautions are made and correct application techniques are administered.
