Some Thoughts on Creation, Evolution, Science and Myth

Throughout this text you will find some references made to God. Please understand that this god being referred to is an “All God”, not an anthropomorphic MeGod, HeGod, SheGod WeGod, or ItGod.” And you don’t have to die to get to heaven. We were born in heaven on Earth/Gaia, within this vast universe I call home.

Also let it be further understood that I acknowledge any god you believe to be of the highest and most good to and for “All”. This does not conflict with my knowing that the God, which I refer to in these writings is of an entirety not an entity and is a god that exist at the eternal core of our Being — our individual and collective souls.

Truth

In my personal pursuit of truth, I often wonder how we, as an intelligent and evolve species, could ever find Truth without each of us, first, considering the genesis of our own creative thought. It is this connection with the first thought of humankind that I believe leads us to a direct link to God — a god yet to be realized . . . but a realization, non the less.

Though we may not realize it, our thoughts and Ideas are constantly changing the dynamics of human evolution with the birth, the life and death of every thinking person on this planet; much like the coming and going of stars that change the cosmic dynamics of the micro and macrocosmic universe. “micro” being the universe that exist in the primordial self.

This is not just a hyperbolic metaphor. It is as real as rain. And with this ever-changing process of our inner and outer universe comes new, more meaningful and useful information that can only be seized in the eternal moment of our thoughts. We are wise not to become stagnant or complacent in our thinking. We don't need big brains to process this information. We just need to wisely use the full capacity of the brains we have for the benefit of Earth and All of its inhabitants; bringing about an aggregate of the super conscious elementals of nature.

I am one who believes that the attainment of perfection is possible; and will be achieved when the human species learns to use 100% of its potential thinking capacity towards realizing that the antiquated truth of the past and the ephemeral truth of the moment will lead us to an ultimate undeniable Truth in the future. We must become consciously aware of truth in every moment of our lives. One paradigm Shift in our thinking bring about a quantum leap in our evolution.

noun (the Metaphysicals)

the metaphysical poets.

In this writing I will attempt to illustrate this by expressing some creative thoughts and ideas that have come to me out of euphoric dreams, thoughtful prayers, and deep silent meditation.

Although not necessarily the most articulate or original, they are unique products of my thinking process — providing me with a keen understanding of my True self, and the concept of a living God — a God that encompasses all and everything, and resides in the dynamic microcosmic universe of the Divine mind of humanity — though it may be latently sleep and grossly unaware.

The Missing Link

The theories of creation and evolution both have their origin in the mind of man. They are finally beginning to come together in a way that we might discern the significance between meaningless and meaningful Truth. In as much as Truth exist in many forms, meaningful Truth is that which is bound to a purpose. Meaningless truth is superfluous and nonessential.

As Man first began to contemplate the nakedness of his navel and the dust of the Earth in relation to himself and the ether of his breath, out of the deep darkness of his soul emerged a finite spark of life/light which in his dreams manifested in the form of an illuminating question mark. In this dream the light beamed the question: “What is the meaning of my Being?”

With this thought came an awakening. The brightness of the light had grown. It had given birth to purpose in his mind, showing him the Way, the Truth and The life in and of his humanity; all revealed in one teeny, tiny, infinitesimal thought. From then on, the rest became history — capsulated in the incessant ontology of science and theology.

This is a theory that cannot be challenged, disputed or disproved. Simply because speculative creative thought is purely and wholly self-evident. It forms the narrative of my cognition and reason.

It was prehistoric man that had evolved to such a state of mental awareness that enabled him to conceive the idea of creation. The concept of God was created out of an awakening dream of an image of himself being molded from the clay upon which he lay. And from which he perceived the creation of himself and all things in life. He had no memory of his Being before the beginning, or of this earth upon which he lived and toiled. He did not know he was a creation divinely conceived out of a spark of light emanating from deep within his own immortal soul, and the unending vastness of space and time. He was a neophyte.

The notion that God was a prehistoric man who imagined himself to be, becomes more profound when you consider the disputable facts of science, and the questionable myths of theology. It becomes even more intriguing when you factor in the indisputable myths of theology and the questionable facts of science. The tales of mythology becomes more credible; and the illusive mysteries of life become even more mysterious and illusive . . . especially with the intentional and insidious obfuscations of truth.

The more I ponder these blasphemous notions, the more my cognitive intuition illuminates the truth and fallacy in fact and fiction as it is pontificated and propagated among the masses. The “missing link” is within each of us. Our ability to perceive Truth emanates from the original thoughts which we receive in deep meditation and invoke in thoughtful prayer, where there is a direct connection and etherial conduit leading to God and Truth.

Think on this for a moment. It is so simple it alludes us. We can find the answers to anything we want and desire as long as we ask the right questions of the answers sought, The answer is simple in that we learn to ask sincerely . . . directly from the mind, heart and soul.

I am no theologian or scientist. I am just a simple thinking man. A man who has spent the greater part of his conscious existence as have theologians and scientist in pursuit of Truth, as have theologians and scientist. However my method at ascertaining Truth is the most tried and true method known to humankind. It is the simplest and most direct approach to finding answers to any questions that is asked sincerely and of which the answer sought is significant in meaning, sincere, and contributes to the evolutionary development and the further enlightenment of our humanity.

Insignificant meanings leads to more insignificant questions and answers that leads humanity into a plethora of useless information and more insignificant and meaningless knowledge and gross misunderstanding.

So what is useful and significant knowledge?

Knowledge of the self is the truest and most completely assessable of all knowledge. It is only achieved through an honest inward search for the TrueSelf — that self which is the ultimate manifestation of God being expressed through the lineage and the genius of man, all the way back to when the first first man out of a dream, believed himself to be the creator of the heavens and the earth, and who perceived God to be conceived in his (or her) image.

This God is yet to be recognized. God is a concept which has evolved through a progeny of the first thought since man realized himself to Be — Hence, “The missing link” which ushers in “The law of Grace.” Grace provides the urge in us to personify our reason for Being. Grace in humankind is the motivating force that tells one to keep going on, to do better, no matter what happens, whether it be euphoric or catastrophic. Our faith will abide.

From the beginning, each thought was gracefully propagated until it grew into an idea. Then time and space were perceived; and with conception, in time the idea became dreams of the “ideal” (heaven); and in space the dreams became visions of Grace-motivated perfection — a perfection inspired by a god yet to be realized, except in archaic and artificial conceptions of myths fantasy, fairy tales and idolatry.

Destiny Bound

We are but children who play with the toys of science — toys that could lead us into the abysmal chasms of oblivion. We are children who listen to and believe the fantasies and fairy tales of ancient theologies and myths that mire our thoughts into complacency and utter stagnation. With the knowledge we have today, we can grow out of this preoccupation with toys and fairy tales. We can turn our toys into guiding instruments, and direct them towards a relevant future.

We can transmute our fairy tales and fantasies to create stories of inspiration and hope which come from dreams and visions of a perfect place on earth, to be built by the dreamers and builders of a heavenly paradise.

We can evolve exponentially, by establishing a new foundation of meaningful Truth gleaned from the history of Evolution and Creation, catapulting us into the dynamic realms of a fourth dimension consciousness which transcends the limitations of just the mind body and spirit alone. We can become the gods and the goddesses that we will ourselves to be, with collective conscious intent and desire. This is a reality that is infinitely possible for all; and although not probable for most, it is inevitable for those who live by the Grace of a God manifesting as One All True God. It is truly the path of righteousness.

As we prepare to take on the unknown challenges of the millennium, we must grasp the meaning and the purpose of our Being. We must understand the simple message of the original thought — a transmutation of the mind to the spirit, and the spirit to its inevitable connection to the soul. The thought that God exist some where in time and space . . . just before us. . . as the perfect "One" — within which All exist, creating the paths of all possibilities to epitomize an apex in human potential — a fractal reproducing its perfect existence.

We have become a complex organism that has evolved into a Divine intelligence — an intelligence on the threshold of transcending this existence to embrace a collective cosmic consciousness in the Sacred Noosphere of the Earth/Gaia.

The scientific and theological search for God in our past is a meaningless and endless search beyond the first thought of man. Our God exist, not in the oblivion of modern concepts and ancient myths, but in the eternal destiny that lies before us. Only through the collective consciousness of a unified humanity with a vision and a quest for perfection — the perception of perfection of the human species, may we preserve this perfect place we call, “Home” — Heaven on Earth. When we achieve this we will manifest a One all-knowing God. When One truly knows God, we will all know God. Only then will we exalt in the glory of.

Okay, so who am I, and so what?

So, who am I to postulate such notions? I am just plain ol’ Joe; a dreamer and one who fantasizes to the infinite degree. I predicate all my theories on positive creative thoughts endowed to me by the original thought of man. My understanding of the cosmos is that it is but a speck in an infinite universe of pure and perfect consciousness — that it only represent the totality of mans knowledge, which is less than minuscule but more than nothing. With all that we don’t know, we can create a whole new world.

Beyond this, nothing exist but the ever-expanding creation. There was no beginning. There is no end. This is the only God I know — The Eternal Now . . . and that I know God, everyone knows God, whether they realize it or not.

Take that to the center of your cosmos as you contemplate “your” navel . . . the portal of your existence into this life and see what you come-up with. I have, and I have a theory that I believe is as valid as anything presented to me thus far. One, which you may have postulated yourself.

Have you considered that the universe always was and always will be . . . that it is always and forever? That it was not created by the Big Bang, or the Big Man in the Sky. That maybe it just is that it is . . . that we are that we are . . . just as you are that you are . . . just that I am that I am? I am Joseph William Edwards — an involuntary monadic seed, finding its way back home to the love of the original Father and Mother of creation . . . just call me, “Joe”.

These words express just some of the esoteric musings which come to me in heavenly states of bliss. I realize they are presented and structured in such a way that could get me “tarred, feathered and run out of town on a rail”, but they are real to me . They are a prelude to thoughts and ideas that I hope will lead to creative action. It’s my way of igniting a spark commensurate with the first spark of creation — the spark that conceived the concept of the religious god of theology, and the elusive god of science, only this spark is intended to unite with the light that will manifest a Living God — a god that is real to all and everything. . . every living and nonliving One — Totality.

The Quest for Heaven

So, let’s go back to the original question mark: A question is a postulate in search for an answer — the act of asking — “Ask and you shall receive”. The root word: “Quest” refers to the object sought after. In the above dissertation I speculate that the first fragment of a thought came in the form of a question mark. This is simply because man would have never began to gain knowledge until there was something he needed to or desired to know. Until he asked, he could not receive an answer. In time he would acquire wisdom enough to determine his ultimate desires and purpose — the meaning of his Being.

We have learned a lot from this simple thought process. We now have an abundance of knowledge, so much so, we now know how to ask for the “ultimate Truth”. If we quest for heaven, heaven we shall have. It is a self—fulfilling prophecy — The HeavenQuest. If this is not our will, then we shall fade into the oblivion of mediocre existence . . . some of us anyway. The rest of us will rise high — up, out of the ashes into the rapture of our dreams and visions of love, peace, joy, harmony and bliss — the Divine state of ethereal consciousness — Nirvana.

I for one do not intend to fade anywhere without at least making an honest attempt at having my ultimate questions answered and seeing my ultimate dreams come true. Not just for myself, but for “those yet to be born” — the children of the future. We must follow them, so that they may lead us. For this may manifest far beyond our time on this planet . Prophecy knows not the moment.

When I ask what is the meaning and purpose of my Being?" I found it embedded in the "idea of the ideal". I am bound to the answer that brings its genesis to fruition. I vow to manifest this . . . before my head, heart and toes gets cold, and buried in the earth of my birth.

So if you are still interested, set back, relax, throw your feet up and prepare to venture into the HeavenQuest saga in the Game of Creation . . . It will take you to a place from which there is no return.
