THE IMPORTANCE OF A STRONG AND A BALANCED IMMUNE SYSTEM

Immunity is the ability of the body's immune system to mount biological defenses against microorganisms such as viruses, bacteria and mold.

A balanced immune response is the only way your body defends itself against infections. Even if you do become infected, your body is more likely to be able to resolve the infection more completely if the immune system is functioning optimally.

Immune homeostasis (immune balance) requires an exquisite balance of immune co-factors and immune cells to maintain appropriate levels of inflammation.

TOO LITTLE INFLAMMATION

Too little inflammation may not provide sufficient response against dangerous invaders.

TOO MUCH INFLAMMATION

Too much inflammation, runaway inflammation like a fire gone wild, may attack previously healthy parts of the body resulting in autoimmune diseases (e.g., lupus, pernicious and hemolytic anemia, rheumatoid arthritis and diabetes).
