A note from A_Non73:

On my morning run today I was in a much better place mentally than I was this time 4 years ago - when in my anger and feeling of loss I responded by creating the Gorilla X character and Uncivil Society project.

For those who have been receiving Uncivil Society projects for the last four years, you know I am no fan of either side of the Capitalist party - red or blue. But after the last 48 months of enduring of the orange racist, rapist, loudmouth clown soaking in attention - both positive and negative while a truly nefarious cabal has worked to undermine/erode what remained of the patina or illusion of what this social experiment was intended to be - I am exhausted to say the least.

I really don't expect clarity until January because the snakes in the grass are going to do anything to preserve their power. That said, it is harder to suppress a mail in ballot than intimidate someone who is voting in person. For example the state where I live has held mail only elections for over 20 years and there has less than 400 cases of voter fraud - mostly a relative signing a ballot for a deceased parent. The fact the voter turnout was the highest since 1900 is encouraging.

Even though the election signified the passing of a large orange dump, I am still wrapping my mind around that 67 million people in this country - about 20% of the population voted for bigotry, racist hatred, police brutality, lies, corruption and cowardice. It is clear that a lot of people are buying the bigotry and division that Fascist cabal is selling – they just don't want their family, friends, and neighbors to know it, so they don't tell the pollsters. It is like they're scarfing down a Big Mac in their car, in the dark corner of a McDonald's parking lot, before heading home and pretending to enjoy a plate of baked chicken and broccoli.

Do I expect change? I can only hope that the new old white man will croak and we can have a female president. Yet I know if that happens the angry armed scumbags will crawl back out from under their rocks and clamor to start a second race war on our soil. In historical irony - replicating the legacy of the last Know-Nothing president left behind.

I accept the Orange Clown is just that, a character who accurately projects of what our nation really is, and how it has been perceived by the word for the last century. In many ways he is just playing another reality tv show character, replete with floppy wig, long tie - who embodies exactly what our country is, morally corrupt, a global bully who has raped the world for resources for a century, embraced militarized brutality both domestically and abroad to enforce racial divisions while celebrating the mythology of bootstrap capitalist wealth knowing full and well it is all a Ponzi scheme. . .and the 63 million voters who said in 2016 that they chose Trump because they thought he was "just like them" turned out to be right.

Now, by picking him again, those voters are showing that they are just like him: angry, spoiled, racially resentful, aggrieved, and willing to die rather than ever admit that they were wrong. So much so their number have grown to 67 million and counting. The politics of cultural resentment, the obsessions of white anxiety, are so intense that his voters are determined not only to preserve minority rule but to leave a dangerous sociopath in the Oval Office.

So what now? I still stand with my convictions and vision for having the West Coast break away and start our own nation - but even here one in three voted red. Knowing that snakes in the grass are still slithering, and need to be stomped.

It was four years ago I launched the Uncivil Society project in direct response to the Dump. In these four years as much Fascist theater we have witnessed, a progressive upwelling has also manifested in response - from pink pussy hats, to Black Lives Matter - and from this awakening it is my hope that our society will embrace, enact and achieve equality for all.

I realized that my initial inspiration of using the Gorilla Girls as my project icon was problematic to say the least - moving forward I have "rebranded" my project with a new logo and character A_Non73 as we enter a new chapter over the next four years.

To interesting times indeed.
