Book Review:
The Arrest of Mr. Kissy Face by Mitchell Grabois

Do the poems in most contemporary literary journals give you a headache? Are you tired of not knowing what the heck they are talking about? Then The Arrest of Mr. Kissy Face might be for you. Mitchell Grabois grabs his readers by the short hairs—his poetry is described by Robin Ouzman Hislop of Poetry Life & Times as “lucidly readable...delivered in a paced, snappy, even raunchy style, a mix of compassion with often hilarious black humor.”

Think Charles Bukowski meets Charles Bukowski. All kinds of stories make their way into these pages—stories about women, family, neighbors, random encounters, women—did I say women? As in the title poem:

> I kissed the woman who slices lunch meat
> at King Sooper’s
> She shoved smoked turkey at me
> leaned away
> and called: Next!

> I kissed my doctor
> I’d been wanting to do it since she first told me to stick out my tongue and complimented me on its smoothness and the elegance of my taste buds
I kissed her and she asked
On a scale of one to ten, how have you been feeling this week?
I kissed her again

For me, Grabois is at his best when he lets his imagination run wild—which is often. In One Universe Too Many he writes:

> The alternative universe
> in which you’re not a colossal disappointment, where is it?
> It rode the Diphtheria Nebula > slid into the Oppenheimer Black Hole and hid there, > rested in perfect silence
> before disappearing

He doesn’t shy away from the big questions:

> What if my grandfather had not stopped in the Bronx and become a presser in the garment industry?
> What if he had continued west to become a bronc buster in Colorado?

Grabois covers a lot of ground—from an Animal Control Specialist who picks up the corpses of birds at a wind farm, to having car trouble at Walden Pond and getting help from a nun, to hiding overnight inside the Van Gogh museum in Arles and sleeping in the artist’s bed, to becoming a Dumpster diver at the behest of a landlady who drives a pink Cadillac.

One of my favorites is The Moment Gone, where he recounts a childhood memory of wandering off when he was two years old and sitting beside a swimming pool:

> A huge mass of possibilities began to coalesce and I felt certainty begin its approach an unprecedented feeling
> No one had yet asked me what I was going to be when I grew up > a silly question for a two-year-old > but I had a sense of the future looming...
I sat patiently waiting for the answer…

Then my mother whose approach I had not heard grabbed my arm
and pulled me to my feet
She knelt and hugged me fiercely

You could have drowned, she cried
You could have drowned

Pski’s Porch Publishing prides itself on promoting passionate, weird, unfashionable poetry, and The Arrest of Mr. Kissy Face is a prime example—far, far away from the MFA poetry mill, and a breath of fresh air.

About the Poet:
Mitchell Krockmalnik Grabois has had over 1,500 of his poems and fictions appear in literary magazines in the U.S. and abroad. He has been nominated for numerous prizes, and was awarded the 2017 Booranga Writers’ Centre (Australia) Prize for Fiction.

Click here to purchase Mr. Kissy Face

Note 2 - click here to see another fabulous review of Mr Kissy Face in After The Pause.

About the Reviewer: www.cynthiaandersonpoet.com

at 9:41:00 AM
Email ThisBlogThis!Share to TwitterShare to FacebookShare to Pinterest Labels: cynthia, reviews

No comments:

Post a Comment

Newer Post Older Post Home
Subscribe to: Post Comments (Atom)

Donate To Cholla Needles