

And All That Happiness

Produce The Future

The Introduction:

And All That Happiness has started a business community project: "Produce The Future." Produce the Future is the bridging of the need for farm, food entrepreneurship education.

Recent times have produced unprecedented food shortages and has created food deserts in areas that were once thriving on proven supply chains. Communities participate in the repair of changes to local economies and within individual households.

And All That Happiness operates within an area primarily consisting of retirees and single family home residences.

The Plan:

Brick and mortar business fronts are proving less reliable due to the unprecedented world economic events. Opening a Home-based business reselling produce via a food truck/ mobile market is the prime position for community and client reach.

Organic produce planted and harvested from the home garden and locally grown farmers. This enhances community relationships, educational and growth opportunities.

The Action:

And All That Happiness Produce provides catering, and buying and reselling of produce to the local Diamond Valley area.

The operation is mobile!
Operating out of a mobile food preparation vehicle (MPFV) food truck allows for service of mobility restricted individuals living within the surrounding retirement and single family home communities.

The Contribution:

The effect of And All That Happiness Produce will be a long lasting community empowering business. Embracing the evidence of having a small footprint in the presence of global change and circumstance.

Communities participate in the regeneration of their local economy and household's. We are ready to Produce the Future.
