Education is a critical component to a communities socio-economic well being and all members of the community should have input and have the opportunity to have their voices heard. Much has changed in both Newport and Middletown since the last study; both high schools are past their useful lives, enrollment continues to decline at both schools and studies show that a curriculum at current enrollment numbers cannot be developed to support all of the student needs. A "study" or negotiation process should be pursued to at least determine the fact, and possibilities followed by the development of an agreement that the voters of each community can make a decision to proceed or not proceed.
