

RESORT QUEST HAWAII Kids STAY, PLAY & EAT FREE in Hawaii...!

ResortQuest Kids stay, play & eat FREE! some restrictions apply

74°F / Cloudy

Star Bulletin.com

Vol. 10, Issue 352 - Sunday, December 18, 2005

Experience Our Hawaii, Your Way

RESORT QUEST. FORMERLY ASTON HAWAII

Bring Fun Home for the Holidays

WAL-MART SHOP NOW

BLOCKBUSTER Online

Try it FREE for 2 weeks now.

free shipping on 25,000+ gifts

shop Target.com

Info | PDA/Text | Corrections | Calendars | Movies | Obituaries | Vital Stats | Weather | Surf

Search  StarBulletin.com Internet Alternate Search wheels jobs homes newspaper ads travel

Star quicklinks

- Classifieds
- Legal Notices
- Newspaper Ads
- SPECIAL SECTIONS
- Island Homes
- Food For Thought

Back Issues

(1996-Present)
S | M | T | W | T | F | S

Sections

- Local News
- Features
- Sports
- Business
- Editorial
- Travel (Sunday)
- Corrections

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Rich Blundell sands the cedar deck of a wooden "fish" surfboard in his workshop in York, Maine. He and his business partner, Mike LaVecchia, say wooden boards ride more smoothly.

Wooden surfboard makers carve small market niche

Though pricier, these boards are growing in popularity for their performance and look

By Clarke Canfield
Associated Press

YORK, Maine » When the surf's up, you'll find Mike LaVecchia and Rich Blundell carving the waves at York Beach. Even in December.

Their surfboards, however, aren't anything like the fiberglass-over-foam boards common at beaches around the country. Instead, they're made out of wood, and they look like hand-crafted pieces of furniture with their smooth lines, wood grain and glossy finish.

LaVecchia and Blundell

THIS ARTICLE

- E-MAIL THIS ARTICLE
- PRINTER-FRIENDLY
- E-mail to City Desk

THIS EDITION

Local News

- » Pearl Harbor casualty named 64 years later
- » Wooden surfboard makers carve small niche
- » Kauai chief faces lawsuit threat
- » Family charity chief finds new challenge
- » Kauai to hail its football champs
- » Military: Training course goes on hiatus
- » Driver dies, passenger hurt in Tantalus crash
- » Good neighbors contribute to fund
- » Newswatch, Police/Fire
- » Corrections
- » Vital Statistics
- » For Your Benefit
- » Kauakulahale
- » Obituaries
- » Weather

Features

- » Ho! Ho! Whoa!
- » Isle Pages
- » Keiki Kalikimaka
- » Da Kine

Travel

- » 'Claus cruises Waikiki
- » Airfare Rates

Sports

- » Rainbows initiate Aggies
- » Triple Crown means the world to Irons

THE GOOD NEIGHBOR FUND

Click for details.

- Classifieds
- Wheels
- Island Homes
- Jobs
- Government Section
- Bidding Advantage
- Advertise

- Columns
- Kauakulahale
- Dictionaries
- Poll
- Calendar

Ads by Goooooogle

Used Surfboards
Quality new and used

MOVIES
Special Packages
MidWeek

Every 10th Order FREE!
 From Dec. 12-16
Click here for details.

Subscriptions Newsstands
Directory
PDA/Text
StarHeadlines
RSS

Contribute

made their hollow wooden surfboards for themselves and now operate a tiny company, Grain Surfboards, making them for others.

Many surfers, they say, are turning to wood as part of the trend toward retro surfboards. They see themselves as taking the skills used in Maine's long tradition of wooden boat-building and applying them to surfboards.

"Look at that grain!" Blundell said, pointing to the whirls and swirls on the red cedar planks of one their boards. "It blows my mind. That's what it's all about."

Riding a wooden surfboard is nothing new.

Polynesians first harnessed the power of an ocean swell on solid wood boards several thousand years ago, while the art of surfing was perfected on wood in Hawaii, where chiefs rode hardwood plank boards as long as 24 feet. In the book "Roughing It," Mark Twain wrote about his experience on a wooden surfboard in Hawaii in 1866.

But in modern times, classic wooden boards fell by the wayside as fiberglass, foam and composite materials came into vogue.

LaVecchia and Blundell had toyed before with the idea of making surfboards. When the talk last spring turned to making them out of wood, they got so stoked that they were up and making them in a matter of days.

The pair, both 39, set up a shop in their rented home, across the street from a bluff overlooking the north end of York Beach. If the surf's up, you'll likely find them in the water, not in the cramped workshop where they work their saws, planers and sanders.

Building surfboards brings together their knowledge of boats, wood and surfing.

LaVecchia once ran a charter sailboat company on Lake Champlain and later oversaw the construction of a full-scale replica of a 19th-century lake freighter when he worked at the Lake Champlain Maritime Museum in Vermont. Blundell has worked on commercial fishing boats, windjammers and sailboats in New England, Florida and the Caribbean.

So far, they've built about 10 surfboards, between 6 feet and 10 feet long, that sell for $1,200-$1,500 each. They're confident business will grow.

To build a wooden board, they find out what the buyer wants and where he'll be surfing. Whether the board will be used on the New Jersey shore or in Maine determines how it will be built -- much the way fishing boats are designed for the waters in which they work.

Does the customer want something for big or small waves? Should it be built for maneuverability or speed? They'll determine the right length, width and curve -- or "rocker" -- of the surfboard bottom, and how many fins it should have.

On the net:

Grain Surfboards:
www.grainsurfboards.com

Wegener Surfboards:
www.tomwegenersurfboards.com

Surfer magazine:
www.surfermag.com

- » All-WAC pick Spencer brings Pack 'home'
- » Signed, sealed, delivered
- » Wahine finish off Camels
- » Swim star Schlanger and coach leave UH
- » Palm Lakes pulls away
- » Recruiters on Hurricane watch
- » Hawaii Beat
- » Scoreboard
- » TV & Radio

Business

- » The mortgage broker boom
- » Women hold many chair positions at UH med school
- » Wall Street Journal Sunday
- » Dilbert

Editorial

- » State should set minimum restrictions on smoking
- » Honolulu's nonpartisan elections are failing us
- » Gathering Place
- » Letters

items. Search for used surfboards now!
www.ebay.com

SurfingSports Windsurfing

Closeout Pricing On Killer Gear. We Guarantee You Will Be Stoked.
www.surfingsports.com

Island Images
 S-B Photographers

In the Military
 Gregg K. Kakesako

What the Heck?
 John Heckathorn

Health Options
 Joannie Dobbs & Alan Titchnal

Yoga For You
 Ray Madigan & Shelley Choy

Weekly Eater
 Nadine Kam

Hawaii's Back Yard

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rich Blundell sands the cedar planks on the bottom of a surfboard in his workshop in York, Maine. Blundell and business partner Mike LaVecchia operate a tiny company building hollow wooden surfboards out of the basement and garage of their home. Many surfers, they say, are turning to wood as part of the trend toward retro surfboards. They see themselves as taking the skills used in wooden boat-building and applying them to surfboards.

The two-week construction process involves building a frame -- one that looks like a ribbed frame of an airplane wing -- and attaching outer planks made of red or white cedar. They glue additional wooden strips to the side rails, shape it, sand it and apply six to eight coats of epoxy that protects the board and gives it its shine.

The final product may look like an object of beauty, but it's durable enough to withstand the poundings that come with surfing Maine's rocky coast. Because of the hollow design, it's light enough to pick up under your arm and stroll down a beach.

But most importantly, they say, wooden boards handle like a dream, absorbing the jolts and bumps of the waves to create a ride as smooth as silk.

"It's alive," Blundell said. "It's like a green twig versus a Styrofoam box."

Wooden boards make up a minuscule portion of the surfboard sales worldwide, and it'll probably always be that way.

Still, there are pockets of demand for wooden boards among collectors and surfers who buy them for their look and feel, said Chris Mauro, editor of Surfer magazine. There are surfboard makers here and there who make custom wooden boards, usually one at a time, to fill that demand.

"There's always little niches where wooden surfboard builders can fill a void," Mauro said. "People love the look of wood."

Tom Wegener, a former world-class surfer who now makes surfboards in Australia, said wooden boards make up less than 1 percent of surfboard sales. But interest is growing, he says, so much so that he has given up making foam boards and has a year's backlog of orders for wood ones.

"If there is something called a collective consciousness among people, the wooden board phenomenon would be a great example of it," Wegener said. "Five years ago there were very few and they were mostly wall hangers. Now I am one of many making wood surfboards to be ridden."

Although large surfboard manufacturers aren't making wood boards, some are making foam boards with a thin layer of wood veneer, said Dave Cropper, owner of Cinnamon Rainbows Surf Co., a surfboard shop in Hampton Beach, N.H.

"They're very durable and they ride great in small surf," he said. "And the look of them -- they look fantastic."

But most surfers will shy away from wooden boards because of their higher price tags, said Ron Lees, the owner of Northeast Surfing, an online Web company in Hull, Mass.

A 9-foot wooden board, for instance, might sell for $1,500, while a comparable fiberglass board would cost $300 to $500 less.

LaVecchia and Blundell think discerning surfers will pay a premium once they ride double-overhead waves on a wooden board.

"That board there is like a pillow," Blundell said, pointing to LaVecchia's personal surfboard. "When you stand up on a board and you're on the lip, you feel like you're on a pillow."

BACK TO TOP

© Honolulu Star-Bulletin -- <http://starbulletin.com>

In partnership with

Copyright © 2005 StarBulletin.com. All rights reserved.

News | Business | Features | Sports | Editorial | Calendars

Subscribe | Advertise | Classifieds | Advanced Search

Info | Letter to Editor | Feedback

500 Ala Moana Blvd. #7-210, Honolulu, HI 96813 808-529-4747

As featured on

