Brand Deck.

Our story.

Campo is a collection of sustainable sleepwear designed to be worn all day. The thoughtfully crafted, minimalist garments are made to be worn beyond bedtime, for living and lounging in simple elegance.

Campo ("Field" in Portuguese, and pronounced "Kam-pu"), native to our Founder and Creative Director, Cinthia Boni Cordioli.

Founder's story.

Cinthia Boni Cordioli

Designer & Creative Director

Born in Sao Paulo, Brazil and raised in Scarsdale, New York, Cinthia Boni Cordioli's passion for fashion and design began at a very young age. She launched her career with a renowned fashion photographer, Kenneth Willardt, worked in house for brands like Giorgio Armani and Marc Jacobs and personally styled campaigns, editorials and some of the most influential women in New York City along side stylist Sarah Gore Reeves. Family always being paramount to Cinthia, she moved back to Brazil to raise her children while continuing to develop and launch up-and-coming Brazilian designers before embarking on her own brand. Cinthia currently resides in Miami with her husband, children, Luca and Vitoria, and their dogs Nico and Madalena.

Our sustainable practices.

Campo is a new brand, developed in 2019 and launched in 2020. Although new materials are used, and new products are created, we are dedicated to providing quality garments that are timeless in design and wear. You will never want to put on anything else to sleep. And you won't need to.

Ever mindful of a "slow fashion" sustainable design practice, Campo's fabric is ethically sourced, and all garments are consciously produced locally and in support of women artisans. We manufacture in small quantities and limit our distribution to an exclusive market. Our packaging is kept to a minimum and made of recycled and recyclable materials.

Recognizing the importance of the purest fabrics and organic products on our skin, our cotton is 100% Global Organic Textiles Standard (GOTS) Certified. Our fabric is dyed using natural, plant-based dyes or chemical-free dyes.

Our fabric deadstock is upcycled in the garments whenever possible. And we will maintain a commitment to sourcing only recycled, natural, or organic fabrics, always seeking to find innovative and beautiful pieces.

Our production has remained local, not only in support of the small factories and sample rooms that employ women in our community in Miami but also to reduce our carbon footprint. We consciously chose to avoid back-and-forth meetings and lessen the shipments across the country and overseas, which are disadvantageous to the environment and our mission.

Our commitment is to contribute to the sustainability of the fashion industry wherever possible, constantly update our customers with our initiatives, and provide beautiful garments that will last for many years.

Our buttons

We work with Corozo Buttons, the global frontrunner, producing bespoke, natural corozo (tagua) fashion buttons.

Corozo, or tagua, its indigenous name – grows most commonly in remote areas of higher elevation. The process required to gather and transform these seeds from their original form into raw material is relatively simple; however, it involves many steps that need low-skill labor.

These steps include gathering, preparing, drying, peeling, cutting, turning, selecting, and transporting at the most basic level. These separate steps have an extensive multiplier effect as one job leads into another and then another, creating a domino-type effect. Over five hundred thousand pounds of seeds are required every month for the process; such required volume generates over one thousand full-time and part-time low-skill labor jobs in depressed and impoverished communities, jobs which help the community prosper and grow economically and increase the average quality of life.

Our fabric

We work with Ecological Textiles, a GOTS certified company. GOTS is the leading standard for organic textiles, and fabrics carrying the GOTS label represent the ultimate in ecological and sustainable production. It assures that the fibers from which the fabrics or other products are made were grown organically, without using insecticides or pesticides, using the most ecological and socially responsible methods throughout the production process. This means, amongst (many) other things:

- No GMO.
- No harmful chemicals.
- No child labor.
- No dyes or inks that have been classified as allergenic.

Our packaging

For the packaging of each product, we use certified home compostable poly bags made from completely biodegradable and compostable materials; corn starch, PLA (synthesized from corn), and PBAT (Polybutyrate Adipate Terephthalate). This combination of materials is non-toxic and contains no Phthalate or Bisphenol A (BPA). They are certified free of GMO material.

HAPPY EARTH DAY! SUSTAINABLY-MINDED FASHION
BRANDS TO FALL IN LOVE WITH ALL YEAR-ROUND

Lest you need a reminder after all the sunrise selfies and forrest bathing pictures people have been posting on social media, today is Earth Day. While I'm inclined to say that we shouldn't use the 50-year-old annual Earth Day tradition by pushing more and more product—shop vintage and alter and repair what you have, when you can!—there's an abundance of brands I want to applaud for their ongoing efforts which contribute to a more conscious and accountable fashion industry. With that in mind, here are some that have a place in my heart for a myriad of reasons. And while I have you: if you really love the Earth, remember to shop less, shop smarter, and only press 'add to cart' when you know it's a forever wardrobe hero.

SWITCH UP YOUR WFH LOOK WITH THESE HOUSE DRESSES

Ditch those sweatpants immediately.

By: Camille Freestone

Since early March our wardrobes have changed because our lifestyles have changed. If you are fortunate enough to be working from home, certain garments are out of the question because of their impracticality when you spend the majority of the day on your couch. On the other hand, new styles are gaining popularity because they have newfound viability.

Women's Wear Daily recently pointed out that the house dress, a silhouette steeped in a complex gendered history, is one of those styles. The draw these days is their overwhelming sense of comfort. The boxy silhouettes are the opposite of restricting. Designers have found ways to draw inspiration from and slightly rework the original style to produce modern renditions of last century's house dress. These reimagined pieces are chic, surprisingly flattering, and don't require heavy styling. Add one to your closet for an instant summer mood boost.

Would You Spend $1,000 on Luxury Pajamas?

As people keep staying inside, some pajama lovers are investing hundreds or even thousands of dollars on matching pajama sets, luxe robes and other high-end loungewear

The first thing Cinthia Boni Cordioli, the founder of Campo Collection, does when she gets home after being out is change into pajamas or a robe.

"I like to put on a beautiful nightgown and cook dinner for my family and have a glass of wine," says Boni Cordioli, 39, who's from Brazil and is now based in Miami. "Even if I have people over, I'm still in sleepwear. Everyone who knows me has seen me in a nightgown at home." Most high-end options, she says, were silk, and she wanted to create something more conducive to everyday living. Last year, she launched her company, which sells nightgowns, kaftans and robes, mostly in organic cotton, with feminine details like ruffles and bows.

A BUDDING LOCAL FASHION HOUSE WITH BRAZILIAN ROOTS
INTRODUCES SUSTAINABLY MADE LUXURY SLEEPWEAR TO MIAMI.
BY GIANNA MILAN

"This is something you'd wear while running around a field," says designer Cinthia Boni Cordioli, creative director of Campo Collection (@campo_collection), while motioning to one of her pieces, an ivory-hued Bianca pajama set. The Portuguese word "campo" signifies a field, and it was the lush countryside of her home in Brazil that inspired Boni Cordioli, now based in Miami, to launch her luxury loungewear brand in 2020. "The whole collection is season-less," Boni Cordioli says. "Individual pieces can be worn year-round, layered or on their own." Devoted to producing "sustainable sleepwear designed to be worn all day," Boni Cordioli's factory uses only the finest ingredients in slow fashion. All of Campo's lightweight garments are handcrafted from pure, ethically sourced organic cotton and tinted with chemical-free dyes by a team of women artisans in Miami. Since the launch of Campo's debut line in April 2020—featuring women's line, a "mini" line for children and soon a men's collection—commerce was scaled down to online-only due to the pandemic. But for now, you can get Campo Collection at Miami Beach's Soho Beach House and CURIO at Faena Bazaar. Be on the lookout for Boni Cordioli's second annual collection drop in April.
