Expert Care for Beautifully Confident Skin

Who Gets DPN?

Dermatosis Papulosa Nigra (DPN) is a common skin condition that appears as small, dark, raised spots—usually on the face, neck, chest, or back. These spots are benign (non-cancerous) and form from a buildup of pigment-producing skin cells (melanocytes).

Is DPN Harmful?

While harmless, DPN may increase in number over time or become cosmetically noticeable -- prompting many people to seek gentle removal for a clearer, more even complexion.

Who Gets DPN?

DPN most often affects melanin-rich skin, particularly individuals of African, Asian, or Hispanic descent—though anyone can develop DPN. It tends to appear gradually with age, run in families, and become more prominent with hormonal changes or sun exposure.

What Are Skin Tags?

Skin tags are small, soft growths that hang off the skin, made up of loose collagen fibers and blood vessels surrounded by skin. Though harmless, they can catch on clothing or jewelry, or cause self-consciousness if visible.

Are Skin Tags Harmful?

Skin tags are completely benign, but many choose removal for comfort or cosmetic reasons—especially when they cause irritation or inflammation.

Who Gets Skin Tags?

Skin tags are common and can affect anyone, but are more likely in adults over 40, those with friction-prone areas, individuals with insulin resistance or diabetes, people who are overweight or pregnant, and those with a family history of skin tags.
