

Caryl Mallory

JAARS

Outreach Coordinator

When Caryl became a Christian in her junior year of college, she was introduced to having a quiet time and that ignited her passion for God's Word and wanting everyone to have the same privilege in their heart language.

After graduation, she served as a park ranger until she left for Alaska to serve as a missionary with Solid Rock Ministries for five years. She continued gaining her extensive administrative experience in fields such as nonprofit and government agencies, marketing, public relations, publishing, training, career consulting, and management of volunteers, camps, and parks. Caryl has several degrees, including a master of public administration.

Caryl has been involved with Bible translation for over 30 years as a volunteer and career member. As the outreach coordinator, Caryl manages volunteer postings on various websites and staffs vision casting events to create awareness, inspire, and encourage others to engagement as part of the church and community relations team.

She also administers and presents at Check-IT-Out conferences. Students and IT professionals learn how computers, software, and field systems engineering makes Bible translation and language development possible in the most remote and difficult places, and the variety of ways they can be involved.

In addition, she coordinates potential staff site visits, IT technical skills questionnaire, and helps place volunteers and some members worldwide. Her team maintains a website www.checkitout.org and wikis, as well as a Facebook page to attract IT interested professionals.
