

Caleb Carpenter (L), Liberty University School of Aeronautics

Caleb grew up in the country of Pakistan where his parents were missionaries to the Sindhi people and continue to minister among them. After he graduated from boarding school, he transitioned to life in the US. In 2012, he moved to Lynchburg, Virginia to live near his brother and attend Liberty's Aviation Maintenance Technician School (AMTS). Having lived as a child of missionaries, he understood the need for global missions. During his time at AMTS, he began to consider life as a missionary aviation mechanic. Currently he is working for the School of Aeronautics' AMTS program as an Instructor. He attempts to serve God each day through his ministry to the students he teaches while continuing to listen for God's direction in his life.