

Natalie Waters, Liberty University School of Aeronautics

Natalie was raised in Europe while her parents were missionaries to the people of Spain and Italy. During middle school, her father transitioned to a pastorate in Northern California and later to a church in Northern Virginia. While in high school, she and her family traveled to the jungles of Ecuador to deliver school supplies and Bibles through their family ministry. During that trip, God opened Natalie's heart to the possibility of missionary aviation after flying with Mission Aviation Fellowship. In 2009, she began attending classes and started her flight training at Liberty's School of Aeronautics. She graduated in 2014 and became a flight instructor this year. She is currently the Assistant to the Dean and is looking forward to using the training God has given her on the global mission field one day!
