

Jon Weber, Spokane Turbine Center

My passion for airplanes began when I was about 2 years old, but my passion for knowing God and serving people in His name came of age as I studied aviation in college. During those four years, I began realizing a passion for communicating, interacting, and mentoring. Although I graduated college as a certificated pilot and aircraft maintenance technician, my passion for people led me to Eastern Europe. My first two years as a professional were spent in Lithuania, where I served students from 18 different post-Soviet countries at a Christian university.

Returning from overseas, I worked at LeTourneau University in Texas, where I served and mentored students entering a Christ-centered collegiate aviation program. So far, eight of the students I worked with have become mission aviation professionals, with countless others representing Christ in airline cockpits, maintenance hangars, and air traffic control facilities around the world. During my time at LeTourneau I also married Tamryn and welcomed three wonderful children in this world.

In February 2015, our family transitioned to Spokane, Washington, as I became Director of Development at Spokane Turbine Center. This organization performs advanced, professional flight and maintenance training for mission pilots and technicians who will be operating turbine-powered aircraft. We consolidate turbine mission aviation training for around 17 different organizations, and use the latest in aviation training technology. In this role, I help connect God's people to mission aviation through relationships and donor development.
