Manuscripts in Progress

The Cartographic Fool: Cartography and Visual Culture in Counter-Reformation Antwerp, 1550-1600

The manuscript covers cartography and printmaking in France and Belgium in the late sixteenth century. It uses two famous foolscap map prints—one that was cut in Paris in 1575 and another that was engraved in Antwerp in 1590—to highlight a Catholic rejection of cartographers' claims that the study of maps instilled wisdom. Four of a planned eight chapters are written.

The Decline of Space: Euclid between Ancient and Medieval Worlds

This manuscript emerged from my book The Spatial Reformation. It covers the rise and decline of "hierarchy of being" within Western thought and argues that the concentration on being marginalized Euclidean geometry's three-dimensional space. It was only when late medieval discourses on God's will undermined then-traditional views of being that a full vision of Euclidean spatial thought re-entered the Western tradition. Two of a planned six chapters are written.

Current Manuscript Project

The Transatlantic Mind: European Libraries in Colonial Latin America.

This project explores the significance of colonial-era libraries to the development of Latin American intellectual traditions. At this stage, it concentrates on libraries in Argentina, Mexico, Peru, and Brazil. Initial research forays into various Mexican libraries have been done and other research trips in South America are underway. This project is being funded by a research grant from CIDE.

Current Project in Digital History

Digitize the Monastic Library of the Convento San Francisco in Lima.

This project will digitize the monastery's 24,000-volume library and make all the images available on the internet through the portal of the National Library of Peru. The National University of San Marcos in Lima and the National Library have already agreed to participate. We will submit a project proposal in the April of 2020 to the Mellon Foundation in the United States.
